Ancient Masques

A masque was a species of dramatic entertainment which reached the highest popularity in England in the reign of James I but which also was a favorite diversion at the courts of Henry VIII and Elizabeth. The masque probably grew out of the "mummings" which are heard of in England as early as 1377. Masques were commonly played before royalty and the nobility. Rev. Ronald Bayne, writing of the masque, says, "Essential masque was the appeal of the moment to the eye, and the ear, the blaze of color and light, the mist of perfumes, the succession of rapidly changing scenes and tableaux crowded with wonderful and beautiful figures."

JUDITH'S SACRIFICE PAID

A CHRISTMAS STORY
by
L. B. Lyons

CHRISTMAS eve and Judith Ross found herself alone at last but still very lonely. Her only relative, her kid brother, Paul, had just gone away, taking a bride with him.

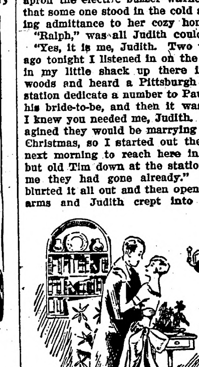
"One of these days, Judith, Paul will go and marry some one and then you'll be left alone," her sweetheart, Ralph Reed, told her two years before on Christmas eve, just after Judith had refused to go with him into Canada. Ralph's prophecy had come true—Paul had not sacrificed his love affairs to remain at home with her and she hadn't expected it, and yet she was thinking how unfairly life had treated her.

Judith gave a sigh and looked about her, for there were the wedding decorations, including the mistletoe, the flowers, the wreaths, the huge bell and the banked altar in the library.

Just as she donned a great coverall apron the electric buzzer warned her that some one stood in the cold awaiting admittance to her cozy home.

"Ralph," was all Judith could say.

"Yes, it is me, Judith. Two weeks ago tonight I listened in on the radio in my little shack up there in the woods and heard a Pittsburgh radio station dedicate a number to Paul and his bride-to-be, and then it was that I knew you needed me, Judith. I imagined they would be marrying about Christmas, so I started out the very next morning to reach here in time, but old Tim down at the station told me they had gone already." Ralph blurted it all out and then opened his arms and Judith crept into them, knowing her troubles were all at an end, and she was to be repaid for the years she had sacrificed for her kid brother.



"How Did You Know I Would Still Be Waiting for You."

"How did you know I would still be waiting for you, Ralph?" she mumbled from the depths of his great coat.

"Love takes a lot for granted you know, dear, and then, too, a few weeks ago, I heard you sing "Still Waiting For You, Dear," from the radio station, and didn't I recognize that favorite song of mine even before I heard them announce the singer? I knew you'd not be singing that if some one else had claimed you."

Just then the buzzer brought them back to earth and Judith arranged her tumbled locks as she went to answer the ring. There stood the little old parson who had just left the house a few hours before.

"Have you forgotten something?" asked Judith.

"No, I believe not; I've my book and the promise of two witnesses who will be along in a minute," Parson Henderson assured her.

"Witnesses?" she asked.

"Yes, dear," Ralph answered, for he had followed her into the hall. "I took a lot for granted, phoned the parson, and now we can be married on Christmas eve, just as we had planned to do, when Paul refused to go back to Canada with us."

True to their word, a few moments later the parson's sister and her daughter joined the little group at the Ross home. Underneath the same wedding bell, before the same flower-banked altar in the library, in the shadows cast by the same flickering tapers that had furnished the setting for her brother's wedding, Judith promised to "love and cherish" Ralph.

There had been oceans of food left over from Paul's wedding feast and the little bride, Judith, herself, set out the remaining salad, cold pressed chicken and the other goodies. "Just a pot-luck wedding dinner, folks," she proclaimed.

Her eyes grew starry as Ralph retorted: "It might be a pot-luck dinner but it's not a pot-luck Christmas eve, for it is the happiest Christmas eve in my whole life, folks." As he made the statement he slipped a most generous fee into the parson's hand, making it the happiest Christmas eve for the parson, too. Judith had noticed his movement, so she followed by slipping to the two women folks two tiny jade pins which she had purchased sometime ago to give as presents, but hadn't found a place for them before. "After all," thought Judith, "Christmas is synonymous with love, and love is a synonym for Christmas."

One of the Least

A Christmas Story
by
Robert Stead

MR. SAMPSON had not noticed that silence had fallen in the outer office. The clatter of typewriters was stilled; the hum of activity had ceased.

Deferentially his door was opened, and Jones, the head clerk, entered.

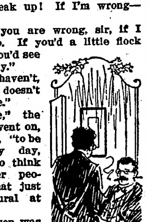
"I just thought I'd drop in and say 'Merry Christmas,' Mr. Sampson. Tomorrow's Christmas, you know."

"So it is, Jones, but I don't see anything to be merry about. People buying things they can't afford, and eating more than they can digest. Isn't it so?"

Jones hesitated. Mr. Sampson was a man of strong opinions.

"Well, speak up! If I'm wrong—show me!"

"I think you are wrong, sir, if I may say so. If you'd a little flock of kiddies you'd see it differently."



"But I haven't, and that doesn't convince me."

"You see," the head clerk went on, emboldened, "to be happy, any day, you have to think about other people, and that just comes natural at Christmas."

Mr. Sampson was silent for some moments, while he gazed through the window at the dusk settling over the city. When he spoke the crispness of his voice was mellowed.

"To be happy I have to avoid thinking of other people," he said.

Jones felt himself dismissed, and silently withdrew. He knew something of his chief's unhappy love affair, which had left him worse than a widower, and had turned all his great ability toward making money, a pursuit in which he had been particularly successful. But from happiness he seemed to be permanently divorced.

At the door of the office building an hour later Mr. Sampson was confronted by an urchin with the challenge, "Buy a paper, sir?" Ordinarily he would have ignored the child, but Jones' injunction, 'You have to think of other people,' was insistent in his ears. He bought a paper, and, on an impulse, questioned the lad.

"Had your supper?"

"No, sir. I don't get supper 'til I get my papers sold."

"How would you like to come and have supper with me?"

The boy looked his surprise. "You mean it?"

"Yes, I mean it. Come along."

But the boy demurred. "Can't go 'til I sell my papers. This is the best hour, and I got to keep busy." He made a deft sale to a passer-by without interrupting the conversation.

"How many papers have you left."

"Twenty."

Mr. Sampson counted out forty cents. "I'll buy them all. Now we can go to supper."

He led the puzzled boy across the street. His first thought was his club, but he changed his mind and turned into a cheap but wholesome restaurant. Here he ordered a meal and they ate together. Once convinced that there was no trick about it the boy attacked his food with gusto, while his host looked on with more enjoyment than he had experienced for many a day. By judicious questioning he learned that the boy's name, like his own, was George; he lived upstairs at 18 Garrett street; he had a father and mother, an older sister, and a younger brother.

He ventured a more delicate question: "Does Santa Claus come to your house, George?"

"He used to, but dad's been out of work for a long while," he boy replied, wistfully. "And the baby's sick, so mother can't go out to work, and it takes all Jean and me—and I—can earn just to keep things going."

"I'm sure it does," said Mr. Sampson. "Well, I must get along now. You can go home early tonight."

He parted with the boy, but immediately went to a telephone. "Hello, is that Doctor Morgan? Frank, I want you to run out at once to 18 Garrett street, upstairs. There's a sick child there. Take him to a hospital, see that he has everything he needs, and send the bill to me."

"I'll run right out," said the doctor. "Merry Christmas, George."

"Merry Christmas, Frank!" Mr. Sampson replied. And, as he hung up the receiver, he wondered at the new ring in his voice.

Homeless Men Glad to Find Stray Ducks' Eggs

Any morning before the rush traffic has begun you may see the homeless ones who sleep on the London embankment walking slowly along, peering over the parapet at the steps and landings. They are looking for ducks' eggs.

I was walking past the air force war memorial (writes a correspondent) when I saw two ducks perched on one of the steps just above high-water mark. Between them lay a beautiful new-laid egg.

I climbed over the low railing and retrieved the egg. As I was clambering back a seedy looking embankment habitue accosted me. "You've pinched my breakfast, guv-nor," he complained.

I gave him the egg, and he explained that he had found a half dozen eggs on the same steps during a fortnight.—New York World.

Pulpit Jokes

The late Dr. John Roach Straton, unbending at Greenwood lake, told a reporter a number of pulpit jokes.

"Then there was a very nervous preacher," Doctor Stratton said, "who gave out as his text one Sabbath, 'Heaviness may endure for a joy, but night cometh in the morning.'

"Another preacher had to preach before a convention of medicos. He was a joker, that man, and no mistake. His text was, 'A certain woman had suffered many things of many physicians, and had spent all that she had, and was nothing better, but rather grew worse.'

"A terrible Scotch preacher officiated at a notorious miser's funeral. This isn't a joke, though. The Scotchman took for the text of his funeral sermon, 'And the beggar died.'"

Softening Toward Him

Representative James M. Beck said at a dinner:

"If they had kept me out much longer I'd have felt as bad as Brownlow.

"Brownlow was running for mayor, and one night at the end of a stormy meeting his campaign manager said:

"'You're winning them over, Brownlow. They seemed more inclined to listen tonight. Yes, you're getting more popular all the time.'

"'Popular!' snarled Brownlow. 'Look at my coat and vest. Why, they did nothing but bombast me with rotten eggs.'

"'Yes, but,' said the manager, 'don't you remember, Brownlow, how it used to be bricks?'"

France Has Air Police

Air police patrol has been established over France to control the movement of the large number of planes that pass over the country daily. Pilots violating international air regulations are subject to heavy fines. Police airplanes warn erring pilots by firing smoke bombs, and all aircraft being signaled in this manner are required to follow the police ship to the ground and land alongside it.

Perfect Hate

"He must hate jazz!"

"Why do you think so?"

"He always tunes out when that's all he's getting and declares he'd rather listen to his wife than it."

From Bunyan

A muck-rake is a rake used in collecting muck or dung. Literally a muck-raker is one who uses such a rake. Figuratively the term is used to mean a person who makes a practice of searching for, collecting and publishing corrupt practices among public officials. It is believed to refer to "the man with the muck-rake" in Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress.

For COLDS

We all catch colds and they can make us miserable; but yours needn't last long if you will do this: Take two or three tablets of Bayer Aspirin just as soon as possible after a cold starts. Stay in the house if you can—keep warm. Repeat with another tablet or two of Bayer Aspirin every three or four hours, if those symptoms of cold persist. Take a good laxative when you retire, and keep bowels open. If throat is sore, dissolve three tablets in a quarter-glassful of water and gargle. This soothes inflammation and reduces infection. There is nothing like Bayer Aspirin for a cold, or sore throat. And it relieves aches and pains almost instantly. The genuine tablets, marked Bayer, are absolutely harmless to the heart.

PICKS WRONG MAN TO TRY TO BRIBE

Rumanian Official Now Minus His Job.

Bucharest.—An official, recently of the state income tax office, is lamenting the unlucky star which guided his destinies and caused him to catch the proverbial Tartar when looking for nothing worse than a thousand-lei note.

Recently a young man came into his office and desired to pay the income tax of a certain M. Rist. The official looked up the record, and said the sum due was 40,000 lei. "But," says Ultima Ora, the newspaper which tells the story, "the official added that it would be a pity to waste so much money on an unappreciative state; he himself was a man of modest tastes, but shockingly underpaid. For the insignificant present of 1,000 lei for his private purse, he would produce a state receipt for 40,000 lei, and both parties would be the gainers, while the state would know no better. The young man replied that he was only Rist's secretary, but he thought the proposition would interest him very much. Soon afterward he returned with a thousand-lei note, took a receipt for 40,000 lei taxes paid, and the obliging official went home well pleased with himself."

Alas for him, he was no student of foreign personalities, or he would have known that M. Charles Rist, of the Paris Sorbonne, was the adviser to the National Bank of Rumania, in control of the finances of the country. Next morning M. Rist appeared in person in the chancellery of Premier Maniu, and produced his receipt for 40,000 lei, which had cost him just 1,000. "No wonder that the state finances are topsy-turvy, Doctor Maniu," he remarked.

The unfortunate official, who had applied the usual tactics of minor Rumanian officials in an unusual direction, is already "late" of the ministry of taxes.

Strange Army Afield to Fight Against Pests

Cape Town.—One of the strangest armies in the world has been mobilized in South Africa. Hundreds of big loose-limbed blacks of the famous Camel police are parading the edge of the Kalahari desert, while Kaffir sentries, drafted from the tribes of Bechuanaland, are ready to give the danger signal as the enemy advances.

It is not the hostile Zulu nor the rampage of man-eating lions that now menaces Africa, but the long-winged black locust that moves in a cloud sufficiently thick to obscure the sun.

With the capital city of Pretoria as headquarters for army orders, experts are hurriedly mapping campaign with which to meet the attack. Each morning the Camel police jog into the desert on their great humped beasts to observe the thick, white, powder-like substance that covers the earth for a thousand square miles. Above are hovering the advance squadrons of half-grown locusts, waiting for the billions of eggs to hatch before moving en masse upon the nearest town crops.

A few drops of rain will complete the incubation; then quickly follows the overwhelming onslaught of tiny creatures, whose combined weight is sufficient to uproot a fair sized apple tree when they alight upon its branches.

French Gold Reserve Second to That of U. S.

Paris.—According to the most recent statement of the Bank of France, gold holdings of the bank amount to $1,565,806,000. Since the stabilization of the franc, about sixteen months ago, gold holdings have increased by $400,000,000.

Sight liabilities are thus in the ratio of 46.48 per cent against note circulation, and France is the strongest country in the world in gold holdings after the United States.

This mass of gold confers upon France an immense credit power by which it seems that the Paris bourse will rapidly attain an international and preponderant importance. This angle has not escaped the French finance minister, and he is at present engaged in studying means by which he can reform the bourse, especially as regards the fiscal point of view and thus facilitate the emission of foreign issues in France.

Thumb Prints Used to Thwart "Dress Pirates"

London.—Thumb prints as trade marks have been adopted by some of London's most exclusive dress designers with the aim of outwitting smaller dealers who retail copies of their gown creations as genuine. "Dress pirates," these shopkeepers are called by the dressmakers who pride themselves on their originality.

One designer of note conceived the idea of protecting her name by the thumb-print method and others quickly followed the lead. The prints are generally those of the designer, stamped indelibly on the cloth.

SEA JINX BLAMED FOR FATE OF SHIP

Mystery Surrounds Wreck of Fishing Boat.

Portland, Ore.—At times the sea plays cruel tricks on her most knowledgeable followers.

And it was either by a trick, a malevolent, merciless whimsy of the ocean or by a hoodoo, more often called a "jinx" by landlubbers, that coast guard officers and Roy B. McCormick, owner of the Rustler, explain the case of Capt. George Robertson and the wrecking of that trim little fishing boat.

On the afternoon of October 5, when the sea was rolling as calmly as she ever rolls off the bar out of Newport, and when the day was as clean and clear as any fisherman ever wished for, Captain Robertson ran the Rustler into the breakers off the south jetty. She turned over time after time like a spinning top until she broke herself to pieces on the rocks.

Captain's Body Unmarked.

One hour and twenty minutes later the body of Captain Robertson, bearing no marks of violence, was washed ashore. Fisher folk were stunned.

But the beginning of that salty hoodoo which seems to have banefully followed Captain Robertson and Roy B. McCormick, Portland policeman, exmaster and owner of fishing boats, goes back to the burning of the schooner Inez off Yaquina head. That, avers McCormick, marked the start of the sea's efforts to break them.

"I'm through!" declared Patrolman McCormick upon his return from a full investigation of the Rustler wreck. "Never again for me!"

He'd been building a neat river boat, but—"I don't think I'll finish that, ever. I can't fight the hoodoo forever."

Cause of Disaster Mystery.

What he found out from the persons who had seen Captain Robertson head his craft over the bar served only to mystify him.

After working the ship up from Marshfield, leaving there on a Wednesday, Captain Robertson came into view off the bar the next Sunday afternoon. Thousands of times he had run fishing boats in over the high swells. The coast guard, as usual, watched him edge the vessel through the worst part of the passage.

Suddenly he halted. The Rustler made a half turn, as if Captain Robertson suddenly decided to beat back to sea. There was a lurch, a pitch; then the rushing waters tossed her into the surf in a twinkling. Over she went, six times in a row, and pounded against the rocks each time.

Captain Robertson, vaguely visible in the wheelhouse, made no move. He was not seen again until his body was drifted ashore. He was breathing, but could not be kept alive.

The fact that the Rustler was in the best of condition and that her motors and gear had all been overhauled this summer put the blame on something other than the ship. And the fact that Captain Robertson had taken boats in and out of the harbor for a quarter of a century, and that he had been on the sea most of his sixty-eight years, seemed to take the blame off him, and these things mystify McCormick.

Mails Faithless Wife Wedding Ring Finger

Kaunas, Lithuania.—The husband of Mme. Marie Schaulis, former singer at the state opera, has just taken an odd revenge on her for eloping with another member of the opera. He had publicly announced that he would shoot them both, but when dissuaded by his friends cut off the finger on which he wore his wedding ring and mailed it to his faithless wife. He explained that this act was to call the attention of society to her misconduct.

Mrs. Rosenfeld left her husband last August, taking their two-year-old daughter with her, when she could stand no more movies.

Gum Champ Chews 45 Sticks at One Time

Lebanon, Ill.—"Chicle Chewing Champion" is the name by which Betram Smith, a student at McKendree college at Lebanon, Ill., is now known on the campus.

When Smith claims to hold the world's record as a gum chewer he says a mouthful, for he recently masticated 45 sticks at one time, with practically the entire McKendree student body as witnesses.

Smith states that as soon as he has delved into chewing gum archives and learned what the record is for the most number of days a stick of gum has been chewed, he will endeavor to break that record.

It could not be learned whether he was contemplating issuing a challenge for intercollegiate competition.

LIGHTS of NEW YORK

Getting in Trim

This is the story of a gambler. He runs the game in a New York club that is patronized by wealthy men. He weighs upward of 200 pounds, or did, last spring. He disappeared in May, and when he came back in the early autumn all his surplus fat was gone. He weighed about 170, and his excess waistline had disappeared. There was a chorus of admiration and congratulation when he came back. Everybody was guessing how he did it, and the majority opined that he had spent the summer at some expensive health farm. But he told me the real story.

He went to a little farm, which a New York friend had just bought in Pennsylvania. The gambler had been a farm boy in his youth. He looked over the rough, uncultivated place and said:

"Bill, I'll fix it up for you, for my board and room."

The friend agreed, and the gambler went to work. He got up every morning at six and worked till sundown. He spaded up a huge tract for a garden and planted everything imaginable, from radishes to canteloupes. He dug post holes and put up fences and repaired buildings.

The gambler stayed nine weeks and never faltered in his hard work. He grinned when he told me about it.

"The trouble is that when most people go to the country to build up," he said, "they just sit around and do nothing. They might just as well stick in town. All they need is good hard work. Golf—bah! A spade beats a golf club any day for putting a man in real trim."

Education

With all this fuss in the newspapers about the pros and cons of education ringing through my mind, I stepped into a little fruit and candy shop on Forty-eighth street, just off of Sixth avenue. The place is run by Nick, who doesn't speak too good English. It is about ten by ten in size and cluttered up with the usual array of fruits, candles, cigarettes and soda equipment. As I turned to go out, my eye was caught by a tall bookcase, beside the door. I stopped and looked the books over. There was a shelf of books on general knowledge, and another devoted to works on science. The bottom shelves were taken up with formidable works in Greek.

"Do you read these?" I asked.

"Sure I do," said Nick, with a pleased smile. "That's my library."

"Do you read the Greek, too?"

"Sure," said Nick. "It's just modern Greek."

And as I staggered out to the sidewalk, I remembered that I had a letter in my pocket, from my kid brother in college, telling pridefully how he fell asleep every day in his English class!

Anyway, He Looked Fine

Eddie Dunn, long associated with George M. Cohan, is breezing along toward seventy, but looks twenty years younger when he steps out on Broadway. An old-time fellow trouper hailed him recently with "Hello, Eddie, you're looking younger than ever. How do you do it?"

"I'll tell you," said Eddie. "I've cut out cigarettes."

Two nights later the same friend stepped up to Dunn.

"Eddie," he said, "you're still looking young, but you've got to give me another reason this time."

For Eddie was pulling deeply and joyfully on a cigarette.

A Good Trick

In a small and very strict preparatory school was a young electrical wizard who ruined the 10 p. m. light-out rule—until he was caught. This lad had discovered fifteen or twenty old-style wall telephones in the basement of the dormitory, and went to the head master with a suggestion.

"Don't you think it would be a good idea if we put these phones in our rooms?" he asked. "We've been studying electricity, and installing them will give us practical experience. I'll put the switchboard in my room."

The head master saw no harm in that. It would, as the boy had pointed out, be good experience for the students. So the instruments were installed. Some weeks later the head master, on a prowl to see that everyone was in bed after 10 p. m., visited the young electrician's chambers. There he was, hunched over the switchboard, reading a detective story to his pals. He had been charging them twenty-five cents a week each for the service.

Lighthouse for Ski Users

Devotees of winter sports in Germany are so eager to ski in remote parts of the mountains that many lose their way when night falls. In one place a lighthouse searchlight has been installed on the roof of a mountain shelterhouse. It flashes every two seconds and can be seen at a great distance, serving as a guide in fog and darkness.

"Merry Christmas" Made Him One of the Party

FOR years the same old conductor had been on the local train. He knew every one by name, how long they would stay home, how their families were, what they were doing. He had been given a leave of absence this year. There was a new man in his stead.

The new man did not know any of the people. He had heard what friendly people there were on this route. He had thought it would be pleasant to take the trip Christmas eve with people about whom he had heard so much.

The engineer was so excited about it being Christmas and knew how excited those were on the train going home for Christmas. He knew how crowded the little stations would be at every place they stopped with those home people ready to welcome their families.

It was the engineer's way of saying "Merry Christmas" that the train pulled in five minutes ahead of time!

And then, as some one got off the train, "Merry Christmas" was sung out to the new man. And then every one sang out "Merry Christmas." No longer did the new man feel so out of it all. No longer did he feel a stranger.

That Merry Christmas greeting had made all the difference.—Mary Graham Bonner.

A Remembrance From Her Boss at Christmas Time

JENNY was standing in front of the ladies' cloak counter of the great emporium fingering one of the cloaks covetously. Could she buy it? There was the room rent and the five dollars a week for board. That must be paid. The landlady did not wait for her money from anybody.

Of course there was the ten dollars she had saved from expenses in the past two months. And she did need it. The weather was growing very cold, so she shivered in going to and from work. Perhaps she could go without shoes a little longer. And then the boss usually gave his help a remembrance. Maybe he would make it money this Christmas. But she mustn't count on that.

"Hello, Jenny; looking at cloaks, eh? Glad I saw you. Haven't given you a remembrance yet. How'd you like it to be a cloak? But look here! This is shoddy! Haven't you better?" to the clerk.

"Yes, sir. This is better. But it's four times as much."

The boss examined it. "All right," he decided. "Let the girl have this," dropping the price on the counter.

"But I—"

"Tut, tut, you've been very faithful." And he was gone.—Frank Sweet.

Christmas 2,497 Years Old

"Hana Matsuri" or the fete of flowers, is the oriental and Buddhist holiday season that corresponds to the Christmastide of the occidental Christian nations. Curiously enough, it is the celebration in honor of the founder of the Buddhist religion, who was Gotama Buddha, lord of grace and infinite compassion, says the Detroit News. A great deal of attention at the season is given to the youth of the Buddhist land. It comes in April. Buddha was born 568 years before Christ.

Woman as Santa Claus

The little children of Italy do not have a Santa Claus. Instead La Benafano, a kindly, homely old woman, comes, bringing them presents; the night before Epiphany, January 6, when the Wise Men brought their gifts to the baby Jesus.

The Great Yule Feast

December 25 was chosen for the celebration of Christ's birth probably because it was the date of the great Yule feast, when many pagan countries celebrated the passing of the shortest day in the year.

Candles in the Windows

In thousands of Austrian homes lighted candles are left on Christmas eve in the windows, so that the Infant Christ when He passes through the village or town may not stumble.

Kindness at Christmas

The kindness you do at Christmas is peculiarly blessed, so do all you possibly can. But you mustn't mention your good deeds or the spell is broken.

Wassail

Wassail is derived from two Anglo-Saxon words meaning, "Be in health."

Important Notice

Under date of Nov. 29th, a notice was published in the Postal Bulletin calling attention to an order previously published that all Christmas stamps and seals must be placed on the back side and not on the address side of letters, cards, and parcels.

The address of the sender should always be placed in the upper left hand corner of all letters and parcels, and they should always be addressed with pen and ink and not a pencil.

Over a million letters are sent to the dead letter office every year, because they haven't a return address.

WHAT'S ON YOUR CHEST?

Here's one young lady that can definitely answer that question as far as tuberculosis is concerned. The picture shows an examination at one of the free Christmas Seal clinics held in 1929. The doctor is listening in to chest sounds to determine whether or not the dangerous tuberculosis germs are carrying on active warfare.

Because this disease is completely curable when discovered early and treated properly, an intensive effort is made to discover beginning tuberculosis through free clinics. Over 7,000 examinations of children and adults were made at the Christmas Seal clinics held throughout Minnesota in 1929. Continuance and extension of this work depends on the success of the present sale of the tuberculosis seals, it has been announced.

COUNTY BUYS SNOW PLOW FOR HIGHWAYS

Highways in Marshall county will be kept reasonably clean from snow during the present winter and winters to come as a result of action taken by the board of commissioners last Tuesday when a Coleman 4wheel drive truck equipt with a Sergeant Plow and right wing were purchased at a total price of $7,365.

The new snow fighting equipment is massive in structure and has an almost unlimited amount of traction power. It is capable of developing more than 80 horse power with its huge six cylinder motor.

A cash deal was consumated by the board of commissioners in the purchase of the truck and equipment, the truck proper being listed at $5,600; the gravel box at $355; the snow plow at $1,075 and a spring scraper that will be used for summer maintenance work at $535.

A Ford Model A chasis was also purchased by the commissioners for the highway department at the last meeting, W. F. Powell & Co., of Warren having the low bid of $519. The old county car was traded in on the deal.

When the snow plow truck leaves Warren following a storm to open up the roads, it will not return until all the roads have been opened, a crew of four men having been employed to manage the outfit following big storms. The crew will work in two shifts, the drivers being Elmer Swandby and Leonard Brekkestrand with Helmer Rokke and Gilbert O. Johnson as plow operators.—Warren Sheaf.

Fall Tax Collections Show Increase Over '28

A healthy gain in tax collection s for the period from June 1 to November 1, as compared to the same period in 1928, is shown in figures compiled by County Auditor A. G. Lundgren. The increase amounts to $4,433.11 the aggregate amount collected during the period this year being $226,816.46. In 1928 the figures was 222,816.46, and in 1927 they were $204,174.30.

Currant taxes included in the settlement amounted to $201,611.86, with delinquint tax payments of $25,204.60.

The largest share of the settlement, amounting to $87,211.19, will go to the various county fund, school districts receiving $76,807.32; towns and villages, $48,525.64, and the state $18,272, 31.—Warren Sheaf.

MERRY CHRISTMAS

WHAT two words on human tongue are more heart-warming than those! They not only represent a friendly greeting, but in them are summed up the whole spirit of the Yuletide—brightness and laughter, joy of living and joy of giving, health and happiness, peace on earth and good will to all men.

It is a greeting which we will hear often in this community of ours during these happy days of the Christmas season. We will hear it on our streets, in our stores, along our country roads and in our homes. For ours is a friendly community and nowhere is that friendly greeting more sincere. It is not possible, however, for each of us to say "Merry Christmas!" to everyone and thus complete the happy circle of Yuletide good cheer.

But there is one who has that rare privilege, one who has been a welcome visitor at the firesides of the homes in this community throughout the year and who now claims the right to be the first to wish you joy at this joyous time. That one is your Home Paper.

So your Home Paper carries from you to all the community and from all the community to you this friendly greeting:

MERRY CHRISTMAS!

School Notes

First and Second Grades

The Second Grade pupils have dramatized the story, "The Little Pine Tree" this week. The little first grade people have made booklets of "The Three Bears." The Christmas decorations, including a real fireplace, have almost been completed.

"Of course Santa is coming," so all the little folks predict.

Third and Fourth Grades

The Third and Fourth Grades have been studying poetry about Christmas which they have placed in their Christmas pamphlets. They are at the present time writing individual poetry and stories.

The Third and Fourth Grades are having an Arithmetic Contest, in which a Santa Claus will be given as a reward for the one who has had the most perfect marks.

The Third and Fourth Grade reading Club will meet on Thursday, Dec. 19.

The Third and Fourth Grade Little Citizens League will meet on Friday, Dec. 20.

Fifth and Sixth Grades

The fifth and sixth grades and Miss Rognlie are just as busy studying as ever.

Seventh and Eighth Grades

Debating, in the history classes of both grades, seems very interesting, especially to the boys. The seventh grade debated on: "Resolved; The Americans would not have won the Revolution without the aid of France." The boys debated against the girls.

"Resolved: The Indians were more to blame than the white people in the Indian wars, was the eight graders' topic. Both sides of the question were debated by the boys, who won both times.

The results of these debates plainly show us that boys can beat girls at talking.

High School

School work for the year 1929 will cease after the Christmas pageant has been given Thursday, Dec. 19. We all intend to be back to work again Jan. 6th, 1930.

The faculty will leave Friday for their respective homes. Mr. Vieths to Goodhue, Miss Ahlsten to Wheaton, Miss Rognlie to Halsted, Miss Lanman to McIntosh, Miss Torblaa to Fosston, Mr. Overum to Thief River Falls.

"CONNECTIONS"

Mr. Vieths and Miss Ahlsten are encountering considerable handicaps concerning "train connections," but we hope Jim Hill will salve their formidable difficulties by sending a "special" on which they may "prognosticate" and reach home before the holidays.

Airmen Hunt For Eielson

Several expert airmen from Canada have now set out to hunt for Carl Ben Eielson of Hatton, N. Dak. who is lost on the Siberian coast, with special equipped planes sent from Seattle to Fairbanks, Alaska.

Mr. Eielson has been lost since early in November.

PIANO FOR SALE—Fine walnut piano, on which owner cannot finish payments. This instrument can be purchased for balance due on weekly or monthly payments, or cash. Wonderful bargain to right party. Write I. J. Hitchcock, 175 No. Michigan Avenue, Chicago, Illinois, for full particulars at once.

PRODUCTION: Millet seeded this last spring in low spots in the fields that were too wet for early grain seeding, gave an abundant yeild in the sections where the rainfall resulted in light yeild of alfalfa and other hay. Millet is next to red clover hay as a milk producing feed. As a hurry up or catch crop, it has much value and produces, abundantly on rich soil. Try a patch of it next spring.

Christmas Notice

All postoffices will be closed all day on Christmas by order of the department. Any postmaster who disobeys this order is liable to punishment.

Mail your cards, letters, and parcels now so they will reach your relatives and friends before Christmas. Letters and parcels may be marked "Do not open until Christmas." Always use pen and ink and be sure to put your return address on everything you mail. Do not place Christmas seals or other stickers on the address side of anything. We are not allowed to insure fragile aricles that are liable to breakage while in transit.

It will greatly help us at the time of the year if people living in and near town will please get their money orders and mail their packages in the forenoon, so we can take better care of the farmer trade in the afternoon.

A little co-operation on the part of the public will be a big help during the Christmas rush.

Wishing you all a Merry Christmas, I am sincerely yours,

ELEVATOR AT FOX DESTROYED BY FIRE

The elevator at Fox burned to the ground early Monday morning of last week. The loss to stock in the building amounted to $7000.00. One carload of grass seed was a total loss, the rest being other grain of which a lot will be salvaged. The building was put up about twenty years ago by the Hansen & Barzen Co. and was at this time controlled by the Math Barzen Co. of Thief River Falls.

A few empty stock cars belonging to the Great Northern Ry., standing on the side track near the elevator also were destroyed by fire and the track twisted up from the heat.

What shall I give for Christmas? Something practical that is used and long remembered. For men, women, or children ask the manager at Gamble Stores for suggestions. Thief River Falls, Minn.

Many noted musical organizations will appear on the Red River Valley Winter Shows program to be held at Crookston during the week of February 10-14.

Word has just been received from W. P. Kenney of the Great Northern Railway, that the famous Great Northern male quartet will be available for the afternoon sessions as well as the combined mass meeting Tuesday evening, February 11.

The Thief River Falls Ladies' chorus, winners of the Ninth District Federated women's club song contest, an American Legion band of the 9th Congressional district, composed of 60 players from every county in Northwestern Minnesota, and the Northwestern Singers association will be headliners on the big Winter Shows program.

Seek Bodies of 1,200 U. S. Vets

Heroes of World War Lie in Unmarked Graves in France.

Paris.—Twelve hundred American doughboys still lie in unmarked graves scattered across the cold hills of France from the channel to the Vosges. Identification parties are still searching these lost graves, and hardly a week passes without one or more bodies being found.

Of the 130,265 men in the armed forces of the United States who died during the World war 30,794 are now buried in the American military cemeteries abroad. Thirty-seven bodies, found in lost graves during the summer by searching parties, have been transferred to the war cemeteries for burial in the alignment of white crosses.

Every Grave Marked.

In the eight war cemeteries the number of American soldier dead buried today follows:

Meuse-Argonne, Romagne	14,181
Oise-Aisne, Seringes	6,010
St. Mihiel, Thiacourt	4,151
Aisne-Marne, Belleau	2,270
Somme, Bony	1,829
Suresnes, Paris	1,534
Brookwood, England	453
Flanders Field, Belgium	356

Every grave is marked now with a permanent marker, either a cross or a star of David in white Carrara marble. The graves of unidentified soldiers, numbering about one-half of 1 per cent of the total burials, are marked with stone bearing the inscription: "Here lies in honored glory an American soldier known but to God."

The work of finding lost graves is growing more difficult with time. In the first few years after the war bodies were found in woods or turned up by plows of farmers as they reclaimed the battlefields for their crops.

Searching parties continue their work, however, except during the harvest season. These workers possess complete charts, which enable them to identify bodies even though they have been buried for more than eleven years.

Information relative to unlocated dead is generally received voluntarily through some comrade in arms who recalls, perhaps from a magazine or newspaper article, after several years, the approximate spot at which a soldier was killed or where he was buried. This work is carried out under the investigation and research branch of this service, which obtains all information possible from relatives and from other sources, generally sending to the person giving the information a contour map and requesting that the location in which the missing soldier is thought to have been killed be indicated thereon, and then a diligent search is made, generally with success. No definite identification is made unless it is positive, and this is done finally from the office of the quartermaster general in Washington.

A complete system of forms and charts is kept, both in this office and in Washington, and positive identification (after preliminary identification by means of parts of uniform, personal belongings, identification tag, and so forth) is generally made from tooth charts or from certain peculiarities known to have existed, such as broken or fractured bones and so forth.

Buried as Unknown.

Identification and searching parties are working at present, principally in the Meuse-Argonne sector and in the Chateau Thierry-Soissons sector, but are moved to other sectors whenever information is received. Helpful information is received from French, British and German authorities. The bodies of unidentified soldiers, when found, are kept in the morgue at the nearest military cemetery until every means of identification has been exhausted. If identification is finally unsuccessful the body is buried as an unknown soldier. No cases are known to exist where there has been any doubt as to the identification as an American soldier.

Occasionally cases have occurred where the body of a soldier buried as an unknown has subsequently been identified through additional information furnished by relatives, friends, or comrades in arms, after a lapse of several years. When identification is positively established in this way a grave marker bearing the customary inscription is substituted for the unknown marker.

Find Queen's Tomb 3,000 Years Old

New York.—The tomb of the Egyptian Queen Mervet-Amun, wife and co-regent of Amen-Hopte II, who ruled Egypt thirty centuries ago, has been discovered by the expedition of the Metropolitan Museum of Art adjoining the Temple of Deir El Bahri excavations near Thebes, it was reported by Herbert E. Winlock, director of the expedition.

No trace of this ancient ruler, who died without heir soon after her coronation, existed until the present find.

Ex-Kaiser to Return Only as King of Prussia

Malden-on-Hudson, N. Y.—Wilhelm of Doorn, one-time German emperor, will leave his place of exile in Holland only if by a turn of affairs in Germany he is invited to resume his hereditary place as king of Prussia, according to Poultney Bigelow, traveler and author, who tells of letters recently received from the former kaiser.

Bigelow has not seen Wilhelm since he was forced to flee Germany near the close of the World war. Letters, however, come frequently from Doorn to Malden, most of them written in English.

Dimples Sues Hubby for Admiring Dimples

Milwaukee, Wis.—Dimples Bibb Cole has sued Arthur Cole for divorce here because Arthur admired the dimples of other women. Dimples is Dimples' literal name. It was given her, she said, because parents and neighbors thought her dimples should be memorialized by a name when she was a dimpled baby.

U. S. CAVALRY HORSES ARE YIELDING TO MOTOR AGE

General Crosby Reports on Progress of Motorization in the Army.

Washington.—Further evidence of the cavalry's gradual exchange of hooves for wheels and caterpillar tractors is contained in the annual report of Maj. Gen. H. B. Crosby, chief of cavalry, recently made public by the War department.

Motorization and mechanization for cavalry purposes still are in the experimental stage, Crosby reported to the Department of War, but a platoon of a second armored car squadron was organized this year. The first such squadron, organized in 1928, now is an integral part of the First cavalry division which is stationed at Fort Bliss, Texas.

Experimentation is being continued with [illegible] armored cars and with [illegible] armored cars. The latter are capable of 40 miles an hour speed over meadow land and operate either with wheels or tractors. Crosby's report indicates the belief that cavalry in future wars will be in direct contact with enemy tanks, and with this in mind anti-tank weapons are being developed for experimental issue to cavalry units.

The personnel of the new armored car platoon is being instructed at the infantry tank school, Fort George G. Meade, Md. In addition Crosby this year organized a tactical development section to study developments resulting from changes in organization, armament, equipment, combat methods, and methods of transportation. In keeping with the present trend toward motorization, Crosby said, the section has given special attention to the foregoing subjects.

For the first time in United States army history armored cars and anti-tank wagons were included in material for First cavalry division maneuvers along the Mexican border last month.

German Scientists to Study Seasickness

Swinemuende.—A thorough study of cures for seasickness is being conducted under the auspices of the German department for public health. Special commissions of medical experts are stationed on each of the government vessels Hansastadt Danzig and Preussen, plying the Baltic route between Swinemunde and Pillau. These commissions will make tests with the various cures for seasickness manufactured by the German pharmaceutic industry.

Oaths Check Lion That Hits Farmer

Berlin.—Entering the farmyard to ascertain the cause of the bellowing among the cows, a farm manager at Drueckiarchoefchen, East Prussia, received a blow in the back.

Swinging around, he saw that his assailant was a fine specimen of an African lion with a remarkable set of well preserved teeth.

He told the authorities that he gave the lion a loud round of cursing which caused the beast to retreat. He then went into the house and, looking through the window, he observed that he had escaped not from one lion but three.

DIES AS HE SEEKS REVENGE ON BEAR

Park Warden's Body Found Marked by Claws.

Edmonton, Alta.—Forest rangers, searching the Tonquin valley of the Canadian Rockies, found the marked body of a man lying in the snow near an isolated cabin.

The cause of his death is undetermined. He may, they think, have fallen victim to the huge prowler, who is still king of the mountains, the wandering grizzly, for the man whom they found dead had started a feud with one of the grizzly tribe and, only a short time ago, had returned to his lone cabin with the avowed intention of killing one particular marauder before he left the valley.

The dead man was P. H. Goodair, ex-officer of a crack English regiment, member of a well-known British family and, more recently, a warden in Jasper National park. At the end of the war he had come to the mountains seeking to regain his shattered health and took a position as game warden to occupy his time.

Late last summer he was visiting in Edmonton. He told the story of his feud with a grizzly. The bear had broken into his cabin, destroying grub and supplies, but also breaking up a number of war souvenirs which could not be replaced. Goodair was on the warpath. Grizzlies do not wander much, usually haunting some favorite locality, and Goodair was confident that he would meet his enemy again. In addition, this particular bear had a peculiar malformation of one front foot so that the warden would have no difficulty in identifying his tracks.

What has happened since no one knows or ever will. Rangers found the body marked as if from a grizzly's attacks. But recent snowfall had erased all tracks or footprints. Goodair may have met his enemy, fired and missed or he may have wounded the animal only slightly and enraged it.

Arm Hits Mail Box as He Rides on Truck; Dies

Sheboygan, Wis.—The desire to greet his brother who had come to pay a birthday visit brought death to Roland Fatthies, thirty-one years old, of Potter.

Fatthies was knocked from the running board of a truck when his arm struck a rural mail box projected from a fence post. He died a short while later at the office of a physician here.

The man was a steam shovel operator and was on a holiday. He decided to go out to the place where the crew was working on highway 51, near Random lake, and accepted a ride on a truck.

Just before reaching the scene of operations he saw his brother, Arnold, approaching in an automobile. He climbed to the running board and intended to jump off when the driver slowed down, but was hit by the mail box.

Rattler Proves Hitch Hiker on Texas Auto

Goose Creek, Texas.—A 16-inch diamond-backed rattlesnake, with a lust for travel, and a motorist making a tour of West Texas, recently combined to make a filling station attendant wary of future requests for a change of battery water.

T. C. Jordan, of Pelly, little realized while driving peacefully on his way that he was playing host to the ride-stealing reptile. He became cognizant of the fact rather abruptly, however, when the attendant informed him of the presence of the snake, which was curled up placidly on the battery box, having ridden a distance of some 500 miles.

Mortgage on Farm in Wisconsin for 50 Years

Juneau, Wis.—The mortgage on the old farm home that fiction writers long have used as a basis for stirring plots was a reality on a pioneer homestead farm near here which recently was sold at auction. The state revealed that an unsatisfied mortgage for $1,000 had been standing against the farm for 50 years.

Eats Whole Sheep

Padiram, England.—There lives at Woodbine cottage, Padiram, a man named Thomas Haworth who recently celebrated his sixty-fifth birthday by eating a whole sheep in one day. The sheep which he ate was presented to him by friends.

Nonresident

Little Mary had mysteriously picked up an amazing vocabulary of swear words and slang. Mother had pleaded, scolded and reasoned. The ultimatum was leaving home. "Why, Mary, daddy and mother just can't have a little girl here who says such naughty words. We'll have to turn you out if you swear again."

But again it came. Her hat and coat were handed her. Resolutely she walked out and sat on the curb with her thoughts. Along came a neighbor.

"Good morning, Mary. Is your father at home?"

"How in the h—l do I know. I don't live there any more!" she said. —Indianapolis News.

Butter Brings Higher Prices

Biggest Creameries Say Few Cents Worth of "Dandelion Butter Color" Is Best Investment.

Dairymen everywhere are making bigger profits from their butter, nowadays. They're keeping their product that Golden June Color, which brings top prices the year 'round, by using "Dandelion Butter Color." It takes just half a teaspoonful to the gallon of cream. It's the most permeating butter color and therefore the most economical. It colors uniformly and never streaks. It's purely vegetable, wholesome and tasteless, and doesn't color buttermilk. It meets all State and National Food Laws. Large bottles are 35¢ at all drug and grocery stores. Write for FREE SAMPLE to Wells and Richardson Co., Inc., Burlington, Vermont.

Not Manual Laborers

Of the 290 Laborite members of the British house of commons few have come from the hard laboring classes they represent. On the contrary, titles, wealth and professions are well represented in the ranks of the Labor members of parliament. Among them are two baronets, a baronet's wife who is also a marquis' daughter, two king's counsellor's, one banker, three professors, one clergyman, two solicitors, four retired army officers, nine lecturers, fourteen teachers, one chemist, ten barristers, one landowner, one Salvation army commissioner and two cartoonists.

Government keeps so many things going at once that the folks simply can't be interested all the time.

SCHOOLGIRLS NEED HEALTH

Daughter of Mrs. Catherine Lamuth
Box 72, Mohawk, Michigan

"After my daughter grew into womanhood she began to feel rundown and weak and a friend asked me to get her your medicine. She took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and Lydia E. Pinkham's Herb Medicine. Her nerves are better, her appetite is good, she is in good spirits and able to work every day. We recommend the Vegetable Compound to other girls and to their mothers."—Mrs. Catherine Lamuth.

Daughter of Mrs. Eva Wood Howe

"I praise Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for what it has done for my fourteen-year-old daughter as well as for me. It has helped her growth and her nerves and she has a good appetite now and sleeps well. She has gone to school every day since beginning the medicine. I will continue to give it to her at regular intervals and will recommend it to other mothers who have daughters with similar troubles."—Mrs. Eva Wood Howe.

"A fair story," Fellowes applauded. "And where were you, ma'am?"

She regarded him gravely.

"My duenna was quite ill of the sea-sickness, and called me from the cabin."

Fellowes remembered the duenna's face at the cabin port as he left the True Bounty, and his impression of her ejaculation in English. He wheeled upon the stolid creature.

"Is it true?" he snapped.

She eyed him with imponderable calm, gabbling a phrase in Portuguese.

"She has no English," said Miss Inglepin. "You must know that."

"I am not so sure," returned Fellowes. "There is a deal of—misinformation abroad in this room."

Ben Inglepin seemed to think the time had come to assert himself.

"You are entitled to a sense of injustice, Captain Fellowes," he said courteously; "and I hold myself to blame that you should have been pressed from my ship. But indeed, sir, you'll not find us backward in making amends, and I assure you the whole sorry affair was founded upon misunderstanding." Captain Collishawe confessed himself in the wrong tonight in this very room."

Fellowes stared at him with a contempt that set atwitching the wattles under the merchant's chin.

"Frankly, sir, I do not believe you."

"Tush, Captain Fellowes, as one gentleman to another—"

"What has gentility to do with it, sir? I am an American—who has been wronged. And I have yet to ask you to explain Captain Collishawe's presence here. This poor, old man—" he nodded to Cuffee's burden—"gave his life to thwart the treason you plotted."

Inglepin changed color.

"Treason! 'Tis a strong word."

Chater exclaimed angrily:

"No man can't say that 'baout me! I'm as good as ye by any day, Fellowes."

"Doubtless you'll have no difficulty in so convincing the Federal authorities," Fellowes observed.

"It can be explained, sir," Inglepin protested eagerly. "The thoughtless deed of a rash young man."

"Acting upon his admiral's instructions."

"No, no! A personal matter." Mr. Inglepin became ruddier, a thought short of wind. "Most unfortunate, most unfortunate! My daughter—you see, the fact is—"

He glanced toward her appealingly, and she made a little gesture of resignation.

"He came to see me, Mr. Fellowes."

"I question it not, ma'am."

She hesitated, blushing rosy-red, and Chater interjected:

"Collishawe's daft over her."

"A lover's tryst," sneered Fellowes. "That's the tale, now!"

"Need we dispute over it, sir?" she asked with dignity. "We seem all to forget that death is present with us, and deserves somewhat of respect."

"Even a dead American, who was sacrificed for a nest of traitors?" he queried sarcastically, turning to assist Cuffee.

"Does it matter for what a man dies, if it be only what he believes—Oh!" Her voice shrilled in a scream. "Your back! Your back!"

One hand flew to her mouth as if to contain the sobs that rattled in her throat; the other was extended shakily toward Fellowes, who, in turning, had exposed his striped back and flanks to the glare of the candles in the wall-sconces. The agony in her face was unmistakable.

"Oh, Father!" she wailed. "How dreadful! That was what he meant—when he spoke of punishment."

Fellowes fronted her again, stirred, despite himself, by the genuineness of her emotion, provoked that he should be.

"'Twas only a hundred lashes," he said. "Is it so much worse than you looked for?"

She shuddered.

"How you must hate me!" There was no trace of belligerance in her manner. "I am proud, too. A hundred lashes! I should hate— But words are cheap, sir."

"They have their price," Fellowes agreed coldly. "'Tis lamentable a lesser injustice should breed a greater, but those who deal in injustice may not complain if their victims rebel against the larger portion."

"Injustice!" She swayed. "Ah, if I might make you see. Oh, Father, I said ill should come of this, and sure, 'tis here. He does well to hate me," she panted. "That back! How can men— Oh, there are stripes on my soul will never fade!"

And she collapsed in a crumpled, green mass on the turkey carpet.

There was a sudden tense silence in the crowded parlor. Then Inglepin bent over his daughter, and the duenna swept across the floor, a purposeful glint in her beady eyes. Fellowes motioned Cuffee toward the dining-room.

"They will require the sofa for the lady. Lay Sergeant Peirt on the table. Tom, you stand guard at the door here. And remember, no one is to pass out."

"Nonsense, Captain Fellowes!" Inglepin abandoned his daughter to the capable attentions of the duenna. "We must remove this girl to her bedroom."

"Not for the present, sir. None of you leaves this room without being searched—or until after the house has been searched."

"Mighty high-handed, ain't ye?" whined Chater. And Inglepin slammed a plump fist into a plump palm.

"By Heaven, young man, you go too far! I may be a Federalist in a state governed by Democratic banditti, but you'll learn I'm not without either friends or influence. Search, and be d—d to you!"

"Ye'll find nothin'," jeered Chater.

Footsteps sounded in the hall, and Tom leaned Cuffee's musket against the parlor wall, hefting his ax expertly.

"Strange craft in the offin', messmate," he reported. "Boarders in the companionway." He peeked around the lintel. "Sink me, if 'tain't that milishy cap'n."

Chater bared yellow fangs to greet Nimrod Sopher, who stalked in, the dragoon saber in hand, a slightly sheepish air of bravado on his long face.

"Well, naow, Sopher, this is real neighborly of ye, overunnin' my farm with yer Fencibles! I s'pose ye're fixin' to rid me of Squire Fellowes 'n' all this crazyfool talk o' his'n?"

Sopher was taken aback.

"I wouldn't go so far as to say that," he denied. "You know, you are subject to suspicion, Chater—oh, not in any atrabilious or, let us say, invective sense—No, no, nothing libelous! Merely, that you have—ah—whether of your own volition or not, been in communication with the enemy."

"How can I help it if some young squirt o' a Britisher wants to come ashore to see a gal?" demanded Chater.

Fellowes found the form and tone of the question as unpleasant as did Inglepin.

"That will do," he ordered sharply. "Are your men outside, Nimrod?"

"Most of them. I—ah—thought best to rally them after—we—ah—parted company."

"If they hadn't had to—rally—we should have taken Collishawe, and poor old Peirt wouldn't have died by himself."

"Oh, quite a rash statement, my dear fellow, quite a rash statement," objected the lawyer-militiaman. "I'm certain you couldn't prove it. And green troops always require blooding, you know. 'Tis the rule. And as for Peirt—a worthy fellow, very—splendid soldier—a veteran, to be sure, forever talking of battles. But fortunately a widower—and no children. I confess I shouldn't know where to turn if we'd lost a man with a family. I must have left the village. Actually, I assure you!"

A sneeze from Miss Inglepin—under whose nose the duenna was burning feathers—attracted Sopher's attention to the couch.

"I trust the lady is uninjured?" he asked, with a suspicious glance at Fellowes' companions.

"She fainted. An excess of—shall we say contrition, Mr. Inglepin?"

"An excess of abominable misusage," flared her father. "What woman wouldn't faint after such a night? A pitched battle outside her windows—a mangled body before her eyes—naked men forcing themselves into her presence!"

"You overlook a period of captivity in the hands of her country's enemies," remarked Fellowes. "And I must add still another to your list of outrages. 'Twill be necessary to search her, as I have said."

"You'd miss no chance to humiliate her," returned Inglepin. "'Tis to be expected, sir."

(TO BE CONTINUED)

Wig of Gold

Recent excavations in Ur of the Chaldees have resulted in many finds richer than any which have been heretofore uncovered. Many beautiful specimens in gold have been taken from tombs which were built centuries before the Christian era. It has long been known that the kings of that time in that part of the country shaved their heads and wore wigs and false beards, and among the treasures referred to is a wig of gold. It is a beautiful piece of metal work made to fit the head and the exterior engraved with minute care. The hair is beautifully tooled, as is also the bandeau about the forehead. Ears of gold show between the locks worked in repousse and pierced with a hole.

Finer Than a Hair

To study wind velocity and direction the United States Department of Commerce has its own tunnel of winds where various tests are conducted. One of the latest is that of measuring wind velocity by means of an electrically heated wire and a five-tube amplifier. The wire is about one-fifth of a human hair in diameter.

The experiment was designed to reproduce the condition of flow around airplanes which move in ripples and waves. Quantitative methods of measuring the amount of these disturbances are now made available for the first time.

Star Of Wonder

A Christmas Story

by Helen Gaisford

"WE, THREE kings of Orient are,
Bearing gifts we traverse afar—"

Steps on the porch, and a boy's loud but changing voice continued:

"Field and fountain, moor and mou-oun-tain, following yonder star, o-oh!"

Miss Mary went to the door. "Come in, Dan," she invited.

"Can't." He shook the snow from his cap. "I just stopped in to tell you I'll be late to rehearsal this afternoon."

"All right, Dan. I hope nothing's the matter?"

"No'm. Just got to pick up some mending for ma." He hesitated. "Say, Miss Mary, can I bring a visitor to rehearsal?"

"Why, who is it?"

"The little girl ma mends for. She's awful lonesome, sometimes, with only a housekeeper around—"

"If she wants to come, Dan, it's all right with me. Did you say what her name is?"

"Betty Waldren. Over on Elm street."

"Betty Waldren? Isn't that John Waldren's little girl? Why, she shouldn't be lonesome. Where is her mother?"

"She hasn't any. That is, her folks are parted. She says her dad is through with women."

"Parted? Why— I used to know John Waldren—a long time ago!"

"Gee! Honest?"

Miss Mary blinked herself back to the present. "Of course you may bring her, Dan. Thank you very much for stopping in."

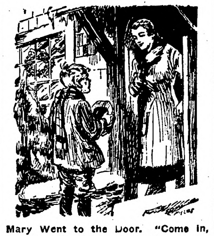
She went back to her mending and began putting it away. Were those tears standing in her eyes? Then she gathered up her books. "Let me see now. Prompt book, hymn book— His child! I wonder what she's like?—veil for Luck— I was a fool!— Oh, yes, the duster! How can I ever make a duster look like a baby? Maybe a pillow would be better?" She gave the duster an impatient shake and wrapped Lucy's veil around it. Then she got her wraps and set out for the Mission house.

Miss Mary was directing the "Pageant"—using the children affected by her settlement work as characters in the Nativity. She had to forget John Waldren and get to her work.

It was cold in the Mission house, for fuel is expensive. It was dim in the Mission house, for lights were never lit until the afterglow had faded.

The light was less dim for a moment as the outer door opened and Dan entered, leading a beautiful little girl. The other children quickly formed a respectful circle around them, admiring her rich clothes. "That's Miss Mary, over there," Dan said. "Miss Mary!"

"Oh, is this Betty Waldren?" Miss Mary longed to take her in her arms, yet did not dare. "I hope you'll enjoy watching our rehearsal. How like your father you are! I— I used to know him, a good many years ago."



Mary Went to the Door. "Come in, Dan," She Invited.

Dan was already on the stage. "You sit there and watch," he commanded. "I'm Balthazar, coming with myrrh for the Christ Child. I'm going to have a blue cape and a cardboard crown on my head."

Gold. Frankincense. Myrrh. "What a funny baby!" It was Betty's voice. "Why don't you use a doll?"

Miss Mary turned. "These children are all very poor. They don't have fine big toys."

The door was flung open and a man entered. "Betty! What on earth are you doing here?"

"Just watching." She looked up quite unperturbed. "You come, too. Here's a lady that knows you."

"John Waldren!"

"You!" He clasped Miss Mary's hand. "Mary! You're looking well."

"So are you, John. Such a surprise to see you again. And Betty is a darling." But she wasn't thinking about Betty.

"Yes. I thought I recognized her down the street, so I followed her, though I couldn't imagine what she could be doing in this neighborhood." Miss Mary winced at his tone. "I see you are still doing the same work. Faithful as ever."

"My work means a great deal to me." (Hadn't it taken the place of love?) "Come and watch the children practice—"

Gold. Frankincense. Myrrh.

Miss Mary was looking John Waldren over. He was not the boy she had loved; he was a man.

"I understand you're parted?"

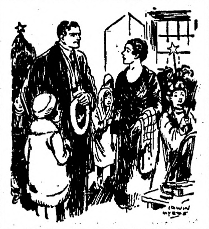
"Yes. I—we felt we would both be happier apart. You've never married?"

"No." They stood awkwardly silent, each trying to read the other. "Don't let me interfere," he said.

"No, of course not." She turned back to the children. Not let him interefere? If he only would! If only he had cared to help, to understand. Gold. Frankincense. Myrrh.

Plans were made for the morrow, and the children were going home. "Good-night, all of you." Miss Mary turned. "Well, John, how did you like it?"

"Oh, well enough. But you don't belong in this— Hang it all, Mary, seeing you again has made me realize that I've never been happy in all this time. I love you, Mary. I need you terribly. Let me take you away from here forever—"



"I See You Are Still Doing the Same Work."

"John! You do care? But these people—they're my very life—"

"You'll forget them. You weren't made for a place like this. You belong in a real home with some one to love and look after you."

"Who would love and look after my boys and girls?"

"I don't know. Not my wife, anyway. See here, Mary. There's Betty. You could pour out your soul on her."

Miss Mary's eyes blazed. "She's the daughter of a snob, John Waldren," she said, and walked away.

Dan came racing up. "Miss Mary, what do you think? Betty is going to let us use her doll for the Christ Child!"

"Why, Betty! Bless your heart!" Miss Mary hid her face in the child's hair and hugged her. "But if your daddy doesn't want you to, don't worry. We'll get along. I think he's waiting for you now," she said, and released her. Betty called good-by, but John Waldren went out without a word.

Miss Mary sat very still, while Dan gathered up her things. It was the same old story, after all. Her work must take the place of love. And suddenly she knew that it couldn't. She would be terribly homesick for the Mission, but she had seen John again. He still cared, in his way. She had already given up her best years—wasn't that enough? And Betty—no snobbishness about her! What a thing to have said to the man she loved, instead of helping him understand—

"Is there anything the matter, Miss Mary?"

"No, Dan."

He gave her her books. "I'll close up."

"All right." She rose wearily. "Good-night." A gust of bitter wind swept in as she opened the door.

A car was standing by the curb. "Mary!" John Waldren got out and went up to her. "Will you let me take you home—please?"

"John." Her only answer was his name. "John."

"You were right, Mary, all along. Betty made it very clear to me on the way home. But won't you let me make up for the past? I love you so much, Mary, I'll do anything. Dearest, won't you teach me to help you in your work?"

The door of the Mission house opened. A shadowy figure emerged, chanting with a glorious disregard for tone:

"Oh, Star of Wonder, Star of light—"

His listeners smiled. "Anyway, 'the Spirit is willing'," said John Waldren.

"And that," replied Miss Mary, "is all that really matters, isn't it?"

ATWATER KENT RADIO

SCREEN-GRID {BATTERY... OR HOUSE CURRENT} ELECTRO-DYNAMIC

A radio—fine! but an Atwater Kent—that's great!

EVEN YOUNG FOLKS know the difference. Just watch their eyes glow when they discover their new radio is an Atwater Kent!

Why is it that this one name in a radio means so much, particularly to those who live on farms? Perhaps it's because Atwater Kent Radio asks for no time out for trouble. Perhaps it's because Atwater Kent never offers any improvement in radio until it has first been thoroughly tried and tested.

You'll enjoy a real sense of satisfaction in owning the greatest radio Atwater Kent has ever built—the new Screen-Grid, Electro-Dynamic, operated either by batteries or from the high line. The two types contain the same proved improvements, giant power, needle-point selectivity, purer tone, and a choice of cabinets or table model. Why not, this Christmas, join your home to the largest radio family in the world,* who get the great programs of the air with Atwater Kent Radio?

IN CABINETS—The best American cabinet makers—famous for sound design and sincere workmanship—are cooperating to meet the demand for Atwater Kent Screen-Grid Radio in fine cabinets like these.

Also in compact table models—For batteries, $62. For house-current operation, from $68 to $80. Electro-Dynamic table speaker, $27. Prices slightly higher west of the Rockies, and in Canada.

On the Air—Atwater Kent Radio Hour, Sunday Evenings, 9:15 (Eastern Time), WEAF network of N. B. C. Atwater Kent Mid-Week Program, Thursday Evenings, 10:00 (Eastern Time), WJZ network of N. B. C.

*Nearly 3,000,000 Atwater Kent Sets sold to date.

In Too Great Hurry to Forge Marital Chains

The pale, nervous looking man was applying for a job.

"I think I shall be able to suit all your requirements, sir," he said.

The manager shook his head.

"I'm afraid I cannot take you," he replied. "You see, I'm wanting a single man."

A look of horror appeared on the other's face.

"B-but, good gracious," he stammered, "when I came here yesterday I was told you were looking for a married man!"

"I'm sorry," said the manager. "It must have been a mistake."

The applicant stepped forward and clutched him by the arm.

"Look here," he gasped, "it's all very well for you to talk like that—but what am I to do? You see, I went straight out and got married!"

Tuberculosis is down half way. Help drive it the rest of the way with Christmas Seals.

GRIT AND GRINS

If a smile can beat Old Man Tuberculosis, little Mary Link of Glen Lake Sanatorium near Minneapolis, is promising him a sad finish. Flat on her back in bed for years with heavy weights on her feet to try to repair the damage the disease has done to hip and spine, nine year old Mary laughs and chats day in and out. She has been at the sanatorium five years.

A constant campaign to remove the menace of tuberculosis from little children is made possible by funds raised through the sale of double-barred cross Christmas Seals.

Important Notice

Under date of Nov. 29th, a notice was published in the Postal Bulletin calling attention to an order previously published that all Christmas stamps and seals must be placed on the back side and not on the address side of letters, cards, and parcels.

The address of the sender should always be placed in the upper left hand corner of all letters and parcels, and they should always be addressed with pen and ink and not a pencil.

Over a million letters are sent to the dead letter office every year, because they haven't a return address.

WEFALD OPENS LAW OFFICE IN HAWLEY

Washington, D. C. — Magnus Wefald, son of former Congressman Knud Wefald of the Ninth Congressional District, has recently returned from Washington, D. C., to open his office for the practice of law in Hawley, Minn.

Mr. Wefald served as secretary to his father in Washington, D.C. and later as business correspondent with the National Radio Institute, while gaining his legal education at George Washington University. His three years association with the Institute earned for him the highest respect and admiration of the officials of the school, as well as their many Radio students and graduates which he served.

Mr. Wefald graduated from St. Olaf College in 1923 and received his diploma in law from George Washington University in June, 1929, passed the Minnesota bar at the examination in June and was admitted to practice shortly after that time.

Christmas Present for Nancy Potter's Birthday

DICK ROBERTS was in love with Nancy Potter, so was Jim Preston. Dick was working his way through college. Jim's father was a multi-millionaire.

"Not much show for me," Dick soliloquized, as he did up Nan's present, a soft, goldy scarf that matched the glint in Nan's hair and the gleam of her brown eyes.

Amongst the ribbons and seals he thrust the card. "When Your Birthday Comes on Christmas," it was headed.

Dick took it over on Christmas eve. There sat Jim, safely ensconced in the cabinet chair in the room.

Dick whistled bravely as he trudged homeward through the snow. It was Christmas, the time of happiness no matter how hurt one's feelings were.

It was Christmas afternoon when Nan called up urging Dick to come over. Dick whistled cheerily as he tramped homeward that night.

Oh, yes, Jim's present was a gorgeous sapphire bracelet and there was a lovely Christmas card. But—Jim [illegible] birthday [illegible] come on Christmas.—Florence Harris Wells.

ATTACKS MADE ON MINNESOTA PUBLIC HEALTH ASSOCIATION

An organization styling itself as the "St. Cloud Credit Association" is again attacking the Minnesota Public Health Association, particularly in its efforts to raise funds through the sale of Christmas Seals. Whoever it is that is conducting the attack states that it is his personal opinions that are expressed. Yet he takes good care that he does not give his name, but dodges under the name of an organization, giving the impression that his opinion carries with it the approval of that organization. To give strength to his article, he misapplies a statement made by President Hoover in his message to congress. He also quotes from an address of a senator from Arkansas, but fails to show that the senator was talking about public health associations in general or the sale of Christmas Seals in particular. Last year, this St. Cloud concern attempted the same kind of distorted campaign and was discredited by the commercial club of that city. Anyone who is at all acquainted with the work of the Minnesota Public Health Association, the various health associations, and the great work that has been, is and will continue to be accomplished with the funds raised through the sale of the Christmas Seals, will take no stock in the statements of this St. Cloud outfit.

The above is an editorial that was published in The Barnum, Minnesota, Herald on December 12, 1929.

Oil Aids Santa Claus in Making Family Happy

THE Berrimans had known both cold and hunger; but when oil spilled prosperity all over the district it included Hal's ranch.

Now he could do things for Lutie and the girls! They should have a [illegible] the [illegible] started to show him through. "Never mind," said Hal, "all I want to know is—is it hot?" Reassured, he bought it furnished. Christmas eve.

Next morning he brought them. He lighted the fire in the cheery fireplace. Sallie quickly spied the row of stockings and hugging Betty, cried: "I always knew there was a Santa Claus, even if he couldn't find our ranch." "Just what we wanted, too," said Betty.

Lutie emptied her stocking eagerly as a child. Silk stockings, bon bons, gloves and deep down in the toe—a wedding ring! "Better ten years late than never," laughed Hal. "A happy wedding, Hal, even without a ring. Money isn't everything." "Powerful convenient though," returned practical Hal. It was his day.—Noal C. Bailey

ROSEWOOD SHIPPING ASS'N HOLDS ANNUAL MEETING

The Annual Business Meeting of the Rosewood Shipping Association was held last Saturday afternoon, and the following officers were elected for next year: President, J. A. Hellquist; Vice-president, Harry Myrom; Secretary, Joel E. Shoberg; Manager and Treasurer, Emil Anderson.

The board of directors include J. A. Hellquist, Harry Myrom, Christ Berg, Fred Jarshaw, and Lawrence Thompson.

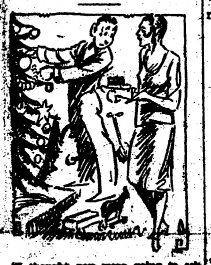
The association has shipped eighteen carloads the last year, containing six hundred and eleven cattle, one hundred and fifty-one hogs, six hundred and seventy-eight sheep. Total gross receipts of the association were $35,670.31; and the net, $29,240.98.

The last year has been the best since the association was organized in 1916. The last year a total of eighteen carloads was shipped.

What to Take

"What is the best thing to take when one is run down?" inquired a friend at the writer's elbow. Would suggest the number of the car.—Salem Statesman.

WHAT STOPPED HER



"I thought you were going to ask your friends this year not to give you any Christmas presents."

"Well, I was only I thought some of them might really do it."

Christmas Wish

Many merry Christmases. Many happy New Years. Unbroken friendships, great accumulations of cheerful recollections and affections on earth and heaven for us all.—Dickens.

A Parasite Shrub

School Program

The school program held in the school auditorium last Thursday evening drew a crowd that filled the house to capacity. The pageant, "The Way" had taken a lot of time and effort on the parts of the school faculty in the preparation, and they are to be highly complimented on the success of the program.

Teachers Leave

The following teachers who are employed here in the local schools are spending their Christmas vacation at the following places: R. J. Vieths, supt., Goodhue, Minn.; Miss Viola Torblaa, Fosston, Minn.; Clifford Overum, Thief River Falls; Miss Amy Rognlie, Halstad, Minn.; Miss Mabel Ahlstein, Wheaton, Minn; and Miss Jeannette Landman, McIntosh, Minn.

School will open here shortly after the first of the year, according to Supt. Vieths.

Notice for Bids

Bids will be received up to Jan. 10th, 1930, by the Board of School Dist. No. 61, for 10 cords of green split white poplar wood, to be delivered on the school grounds. The board reserves the right to reject any or all bids.

MANY IMPORTANT CONTESTS IN R. R. V. WINTER SHOWS

Many far reaching contests will be held in connection with the Red River Valley Winter Shows to be held at Crookston during the week of February 10 to 14.

On Monday, February 10, the School of Agriculture livestock and crops judging contests will be held, with teams entered from Canada, North Dakota, South Dakota, and Minnesota. Other contests scheduled to take place on the same day include the Agricultural high school and Farmers' club livestock judging events.

The high scoring teams in last year's events were as follows: Livestock judging, Sub collegiate agricultural schools: Manitoba, Canada; high schools: Park Rapids; farm clubs: Sletten community club, Fosston, with the North Central School of Agriculture, Grand Rapids, winners of the crops judging contest.

Champion rural school spellers from thirteen Northwestern Minnesota counties are expected to take part in the final spelldown on Friday, February 14, at which time the winner will be awarded a beautiful championship banner.

H. A. Pflughoeft, District club leader, has also announced a number of special dairy, general livestock and poultry judging contests for 4-H Club members.

Short Lessons in Dairying

LESSON 83

PRODUCTION: Millet seeded this last spring in low spots in the fields that were too wet for early grain seeding, gave an abundant yeild in the sections where the rainfall resulted in light yeild of alfalfa and other hay. Millet is next to red clover hay as a milk producing feed. As a hurry up or catch crop, it has much value and produces abundantly on rich soil. Try a patch of it next spring.

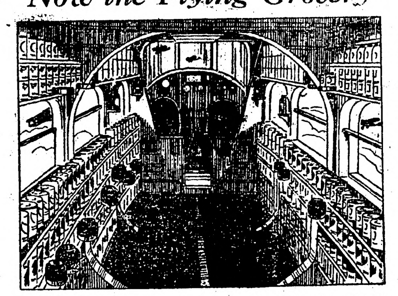
Now the Flying Grocery



ALMOST everything has taken to flying, but it comes as a surprise to hear that even a grocery can now be found zooming around in the empyrean. Yet this modern version of the distribution or at least showing if not showering of manna has recently become an accomplished fact.

Manna from the Sky

One of the large manufacturers and distributors of canned foods has fitted out a tri-motored plane with a complete line of his products and is sending this flying grocery to every air port in the country. Salesmen accompany the ship to describe the contents to retailers at the various towns. Nothing is sold from this grocery, but the permanent shelving in the cabin holds a display of pickles, preserves, tea and coffee and a full line of canned vegetables and fruits. Comfortable seats are arranged in the plane for passengers, and large windows allow a view of the country over which the airplane passes.

The airplane is the latest model Ford all-metal monoplane. According to "Canning Age," it is "a duplicate in design of the airplane used by the Transcontinental Air Transport as a 'flying office' for Colonel Lindbergh and Colonel Lamphier, that used by Mrs. Lindbergh in her trip to Mexico in 1927, and of the plane now in use with Byrd's Antarctic Expedition."

While this flying grocery is not designed for selling, but rather, for the display of foods, who knows how long it will be before airplanes will be bringing groceries to out-of-the-way communities at regular intervals? The rapid advances in aviation bring this well within the realm of possibility."

Farewell to 1929

◂◂ WISHES ▸▸ for the New Year

By Edgar Daniel Kramer

I PRAY the New Year bring you joyousness,
As you go faring in the traveled way;
I pray that kindly Beauty lean to bless
The labors that you do from day to day.
And I would have the stars gleam through the dusk,
When all the world is mystically stilled,
To light you to a garden, sweet with musk,
Where you will find your long-sought dreams fulfilled.
But, if you must know tears and sorrowing,
If you must taste the bitterness of rue,
Lo, I would have you strong enough to sing
The while you bravely shape your dreams anew,
In spite of anguish and the cruel rod,
Out of your heart's high hopes and faith in God!

A New Year Is Born

By Mary Graham Bonner

ALL was very quiet. In houses there may have been some sounds of revelry, but little of it reached the streets. The streets were silent, dark, largely deserted.

Along the side of the town the river flowed silently. Ferry boats, tug boats, other water craft moved along quietly. The swish of the waters made by the moving boats reached but little distance away. The whole world seemed very quiet, very subdued as though night had almost put it to sleep, only scattering a few of its dreams, its twinkling, melodious dreams here and there.

All of a sudden there was a stir. The world seemed to have shifted its position, to be waking up—now it appears wide awake.

Now it was thoroughly awake. No longer were the streets dark and quiet. No longer did the sounds come faintly from the houses. No longer did the boats, the ferr boats, the tug boats, the other water craft move so silently. All let themselves be heard.

People along the streets cheered, blew horns, smiled at strangers, shouted greetings to each other. The sounds from houses grew intensified. Music grew louder, gayer, merrier, happier. Whistles and sirens and bells from the river craft blew and shrieked and shrilly cheered.

Every one and everything now wanted to be articulate, to add to the sound of welcome, to add to the world's good wishes to the world.

In a moment it had happened. Just so little time before the world had been trudging along somewhat wearily, somewhat hopefully, keeping its longings, its secrets, its ambitions, its better intentions deeply to itself. It had been shy just a few moments before. It had been inarticulate keeping things to itself.

It had regarded strangers as strangers. It had regarded itself as a stranger even unto itself.

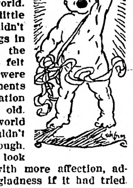
Just so little time before the world had been feeling a little lonely. It was getting old. There was something depressing about getting old. The world knew that as well as anyone. There was something even depressing in the thought that so soon it would be adding to its age. Another year was so soon to be finished, closed.

How often the world had wanted to take others into its confidence, to tell what it thought, what it hoped, what it dreamed. But it was afraid some one would laugh at it and the world couldn't have its dreams, no matter how illusive they might be, made fun of and mocked. Yet sometimes the world wondered if others didn't feel the same way. If others might not often wish to talk but were shyly afraid.

So the world wrapped its protecting cloak of inarticulate longings about it and hid what hopes and dreams lay inside. And as the world kept so much to itself it felt the burden of its thoughts, of its disappointments, of its dreams that never had come true. So the world felt old, so the world had dreaded a little, young, brisk, gay, fresh, spontaneous, tireless, untrammeled New Year.

But now, in a moment, all that had changed. In just a little small seemingly insignificant moment the world had become gay, lighthearted, happy.

Now the world's shy cloak had been thrown aside. Now the world was frank, joyous, open-hearted, jubilant. Now the world completely forgot that so short a time ago it had been feeling old and weary. For the New Year had brought in its little, young, affectionate fists vitality and brain-swept freedom and joy.



The little New Year had been so disarming, so candid. It had not realized that there was shyness and inarticulation and age in the world. So if a bright little New Year didn't see these things in the world, the world almost felt certain they were but weary figments of an imagination grown a little old.

And so the world shouted. It couldn't yell loud enough. It couldn't look upon others with more affection, admiration and gladness if it had tried.

And in the town and along the river and in other towns and along other rivers, across prairies where lights gleamed only here and there, in large cities everywhere the world was feeling very happy. All over the great expanse through which the world wandered and rotated there was a new beginning—a new start, a gorgeous new collection of dreams that would surely come true.

In a moment it had happened. A new year had been born. It is no small event in world circles.

A Happy, Happy New Year!

New Year and Old

By Laura Simmons
in Montreal Herald

OH, NEW YEAR—Leave the olden joys to me!
The sturdy faiths, the shining loyalty,
Of friends the long and searching years have proved—
The glowing hearth fires and the books I loved!
All wonted kindnesses and welcoming—
All sure, hard trodden paths to which I cling!
With all the strange new blessedness you bring,
Leave me the ways that were my comforting!

New Year Is a Good Time to Take Stock

THE New Year is a good time to take stock of our possessions, not only in a material sense, but also with regard to the many things, tangible and intangible, that we all enjoy. One of the greatest tragedies in life is the bitterness of awakening too late to the happiness that was ours. Very frequently, because human nature is such as it is, we get into a habit of complaining about trifles, of dissatisfaction with our lot, contrasting it with that of some neighbor or friend, with results that are far from pleasing. Yet, if we make a true listing of all that we own, we might often find that we are much richer and better off than the one we are envying. The most precious things we possess are often those we are scarcely aware of; we take them so much for granted that sometimes only their sudden taking away awakes us to their true value. A careful and thorough inventory at New Year's would surely help us to a greater enjoyment and a deeper appreciation of the things that we possess.—Katherine Edelman.

THE NEW YEAR HAS COME

THE Old Year has gone and a New Year comes.

Let us forget the old and mourn not; for a New Year, like a new day, unfolds infinite possibilities.

The old year brought to each of us joy, sorrow, happiness, disappointments, opportunity, but it can never return.

Health or business may have failed, or our dreams have been shattered; but that is past. They are the things of yesteryear.

The New Year will give to us joy happiness, success, if we but will.

Health and strength may be ours if we abuse not the machine which has served us well.

Our dreams and our visions may become realities if we go forward, not timidly, but boldly seize the chance which lies just beyond.

Let us forget the clouds! Let us laugh and sing as we go forward! Let us advance confidently!

The New Year invites us to partake of the good things of life.

Let us enter!—Florence Harris Wells.

New Year Song

Our Old Year goes, and let him go!
A New Year comes. We hardly know
The change, so peaceful and so slow,
And unsought, too; but be it so!

The Old Year hears the rusty leaf,
The Old Year carries all the grief;
The New Year brings us all relief,
And bears the blossom and the sheaf.

Our New Year comes! And let him give Us purer thought by which to live,
And greater courage in our strife
And higher purposes in life.

A New happy Year

BY CLARA AGEE HAYS

MISS HELEN BROWN turned her back upon her freshman history girls to hide those awful surface tears which would show just when one tried to smile and say, "Happy New Year!" Happy New Year! Soon these young things would learn, too, that the newness of a year was—bunk. Nothing was new but illusion. Life was old and weary and humdrum.

"Brownie's got a grouch!" signaled June Wells who sat in the front row.

The girls opened their books uneasily. Miss Brown faced them.

"I've decided to give you a test."

The girls wriggled in hopeless desperation. Brownie did have a grouch! Just when they had to have school on New Year's day, too!

Writing the questions Miss Brown felt old. Maybe she hadn't a gray hair, maybe she wasn't thirty yet but—again she saw that letter:

"I've thought it over, Helen, and I feel like a cad saying it, but I'm convinced that our engagement was a sad mistake. . . ."

Her tall, boyish Jim! . . . "Our engagement was a mistake!" Her life broken—like that! He who always said she was too beautiful, too good for him! Probably he'd found somebody younger—one of these college girls or—

"What caused the misunderstanding between France and England?" her chalk wrote viciously.

Those steady gray eyes of Jim's. He was her's! "Our engagement a sad mistake!"

The girls were glaring. A test on a day which should have been vacation! Miss Brown went to answer a knock. ". . . a mistake, our engagement. . . ."

"Helen!"

Miss Brown stared at the tall figure before her. Quickly she stepped into the hall and closed the door.

"Helen, you darling!" Jim was breathing. "If you only knew! That letter! I thought I'd lost every cent. Couldn't ask you to take me—like that. Lord! What it cost me to write it! But, I haven't and—"

When Miss Brown returned to the room she smiled.

"Let's put away our work, girls," she beamed, "and have a little New Year's program. For the New Year is the time to be happy. Everything, then, is fresh and new and—joyous!"

The Thief of Hearts, but He Was Arrested

SEATED in the comfortable Raston living room, with Lois Raston bewitchingly beautiful, and the elder Rastons seeing the Old Year out at the village church, William Field determined to make his great plunge.

"Lois," he breathed, his lips caressing her name, "I have come to beg a New Year's gift. Will you make it?"

"All depends," returned the practical young woman. "All depends what you're asking."

"I'm asking your heart, Lois," he blurted, amazed at his temerity. "Asking your heart, all for myself."

In the firelight her smile seemed kind, but sad. "I'm sorry, Bill," she murmured, "but I can't give you my heart. You see—well—it isn't mine to give. It was stolen weeks ago."

So his misgivings were confirmed. He took the blow, he hoped, manfully.

"I'm sorry, Lois," he said, rising. "We will always be friends." One moment their hands met.

He had reached the gate before he was arrested by her voice crying, "Stop thief!"—Robert Stead

Arrival of 1930

A New Year's Homecoming

By Katherine Edelman

NEW YEAR'S eve and all the little town of Ashton astir and alight! Sounds of laughter and good cheer floated out upon the night and everywhere there was evidence of the hearty good will and fellowship that prevails at this season.

A full moon was lending its charm to the beauty of the night, throwing a soft and silvery radiance on the snow-covered earth. It was one of those nights when Nature seems to almost outdo herself in the lavishness of the beauty that she dispenses.

Ashton had particular cause for happiness this evening. For, in addition to the joy of the New Year holiday, a big celebration was taking place in the town hall to welcome home the town's most distinguished man, Warren Denham.

One home in particular held a very excited person. Marian York found it hard to keep up a semblance of calm. She was fearful lest the loud beating of her heart would betray her feelings to those around her. Over and over again she told herself that she was foolish, that she meant nothing to Warren Denham, that probably the silly vows they had exchanged in childhood were forgotten by him long ago.

She felt that the wisest plan would be for her to stay away from the celebrations; not to risk the pain of the old longings and desires that the sight of him would be sure to arouse.

But the urge to see him again was too strong, and now she was standing before the mirror, giving a last critical glance at herself before departing for the hall. She had let the rest of the family go on ahead, as she felt that she wanted to go alone.

It was over ten years since she had last seen Warren Denham. During that time he had gone out into the world and made his name famous, while she remained at home, living the quiet, uneventful life of the little town. He was now a famous engineer, who had brought to a successful completion one of the most difficult engineering feats that had ever been accomplished in western Africa. She had remained a nobody. It was unlikely that he would feel the slightest interest in her.

Once Marian had hopes that things would be different; she had felt that Warren Denham loved her. But he had gone away from the little town without saying a word, had given up their happy comradeship without an apparent regret. And there was little to give her hope in the silence of the ten years that had elapsed since he had gone to Africa. He had written to her occasionally before that time, friendly, interesting letters that might or might not mean anything.

Nine o'clock found the hall packed with a happy, expectant crowd. It was going to be late when the train reached Ashton, and they wanted Warren Denham to see all of the big program that had been planned for him. They felt that the town should be particularly proud of the honor he was paying them in coming so soon after his landing, and were leaving nothing undone to show their gratitude.

A great cheer went up from the crowd when the big moment came and Warren Denham stood before them. The slender, dark-haired man smiled repeatedly as cries of welcome came from every corner of the hall. Then he spoke, quietly and easily, as one of their own might speak to them:

"Friends," he said, "I am very happy to be with you tonight. This is a moment that I have looked forward to for a long time. During all my wanderings the thought of the day I would come home has been with me. But you have made it even happier than I had anticipated." His voice almost broke for a moment, then he went on:

"It was the thought of your faith and trust in me that often lent me strength—that made me want to do my level best. I owe you far more than you owe me. And I am proud and happy to be back."

It was nearing midnight when the program was over; then the crowd surged up to shake Warren Denham's hand. But Marian York stole quietly away. She felt it was better to do this. More than ever now she seemed to realize the great gulf that lay between her and Warren Denham. She must not allow herself to see him; it would entail too much after-suffering to see the indifference in his eyes.

With quick steps she walked up the deserted street. "Oh, why had he come back, to revive all those memories she had tried so hard to stifle? Life was going to be harder and lonelier for her than ever now! If only he had stayed away!"

Suddenly she woke to the consciousness that she was being followed; footsteps were gaining on her at every moment. Her heart began to pound. There was something about the footsteps that seemed to be familiar. Again she told herself that she was foolish; that it was probably some one who was in a hurry to get home.

Now, the hurrying one had caught up with her and a voice spoke—a dear and well-remembered voice out of the past: "Why—why are you rushing away, Marian? I thought you would be one of the first to welcome me."

"Why—Why Are You Rushing Away, Marian?"

Confused and stammering, Marian stood before Warren Denham. "I—I thought there were so many others," she said. "I—I did not think that you would miss me. Things are different now, Warren."

"Not miss you, Marian!" Warren Denham's voice held tenderness and emotion. "Why, Marian, all the things I said in the hall tonight were meant for you. I do love this little town, but—but you are really Ashton to me. I—I found out as soon as I got to Africa how much you meant to me. But my word was pledged then, and I could not come back. I felt that I must finish the job, and I couldn't ask you to come there. But all the time I kept hoping that you would wait for me.

"Marian, tell me now if the old promise of our childhood still stands good. Will you marry me?"

As Marian gave him her answer the joyous bells rang out the happy message that another New Year was born. While the strains of rejoicing were wafted over the snow-covered ways, two hearts sang with joy for the happiness that the New Year had brought them.

Longest and Shortest Day

There has been some discussion as to which is really the shortest day of the year. It is agreed, however, that the longest day for some folks is the second day in the life of a New Year resolution.

Movement in Poland to Change Unseemly Names

A Polish parliamentary deputy belonging to one of the peasant parties wishes to introduce a law to facilitate and cheapen the changing of surnames. Many peasants' surnames have crystalized out of mocking nick names conferred by neighbors. There are on record "Paunch," "Leprosy," "Scurf" and many others still less complimentary. Jews are often in a worse plight than peasants. Until the end of the Eighteenth century they bore patronymics such as "Abraham, son of Jacob."

The police of the three powers that partitioned Poland insisted that they should all take surnames. Either in an attempt to extort bribes or else to amuse themselves they often inflicted the most ridiculous and unseemly names on the unfortunate Jews. "Tonweight," "Abdominal Ulcer" and "Berlin Blue" are among those recorded.

Some such surnames have so grossly indecent a meaning that they could not be translated in the pages of a respectable paper. Some of the Jews, who only understood Yiddish, did not know what their Russian names meant. Thousands of them have changed their names since the war.—Exchange.

Old Engine Superannuated

An old hauling engine at Seaham docks once used for drawing wagons by a wire rope up an incline, has been dismantled. The engine was of the beam type and on the beam is the date of 1825. The docks were begun in 1828 and tradition says that before being set up at Seaham the engine did duty at a colliery in the west of the country. It worked regularly up to the war period. Very ponderous in character, the engine had a fly wheel 20 feet in diameter and a large upright cylinder.—London Mail.

Yet, for all his bluster, Fellowes detected in the merchant's bearing an aspect of relief. Chater, too, resumed his position by the mantelpiece, a fleer of derision in his greenish eyes. Could it be that they had no documentary evidence to conceal, and accepted the threat of search as admission his case against them would collapse without it? His lips tightened; his voice hardened.

"Send a man for Mrs. Rhodes, Nimrod."

"She's outside. She came up from the village when she heard some of the men were hurt."

"Have her in. I want her to search these women."

Sopher flung up a window.

"Corporal Eaches! Ask Mrs. Rhodes to be good enough to step inside."

She bustled in the door, and stood for a moment, blinking her eyes at the company.

"A reg'lar party," she commented. "Waall, squire, I see ye lost yer shirt. 'Must have be'n a real battle, by all accounts. What's wrong with the gal, thar?"

"She'll be all right," Fellowes answered. "I want you to search her, Mrs. Rhodes. The Portuguese woman, too."

Mrs. Rhodes planted herself in front of the sofa, arms akimbo.

"And what do I s'arch 'em for?" she demanded.

"Papers. Anything, except the clothes they wear—and make certain no documents are concealed in seams or pockets."

"Leave 'em to me," the widow returned briskly. "And cl'ar out all these menfolks."

As Fellowes herded captives and captors into the hall, she was already at her task, closing the doors that connected with the dining-room, her lips moving in prayer.

Sopher dropped back beside Fellowes, a worried look in the lawyer's horsey face.

"I'm not entirely positive as to the legality of these measures, Lion," he remarked confidentially. "If we find nothing—"

"Man, I saw Miss Inglepin coming out of British headquarters in Lisbon with Lord Wellington—talking treason, if words mean anything. I saw her exchanging documents with Collishawe in Chater's cabin—and was I crimped by Collishawe simply because he needed another hand? Use your wits, Nimrod!"

"'Tis my wits tell me we must have documentary proof of all that," the lawyer retorted doggedly. "But argument will carry us no whither. Do you search Inglepin, and I will take Chater."

Their prisoners submitted with an ill grace, both, however, in no wise disturbed seriously—which wasn't odd, for nothing of moment was found on either of them. A search of the house produced a quantity of correspondence, and a map of the country showing the rough division of political sentiment; but not a line of matter more offensive than was openly preached in every Federalist newspaper.

Descending the stairs, very mournfully, they encountered Mrs. Rhodes, waiting outside the parlor door, a triumphant smile on her angular features.

"Thar wore jest this," she announced, extending a single sheet of notepaper. "In the lady's bodice."

Fellowes accepted the sheet from her, and carried it to the open front door to examine, Sopher peering over his shoulder. The letter-flap was unaddressed, unsealed and unfranked. On the inner side was written:

H. M. S. Badger,
On Station off New York,
July 8, 1813

Dearest Cara:

If we are denied a word alone, I write this to substitute for the plea I would prefer to ofer with my Lips. 'Tis the Plea has been in my heart Since we met first at the Rothsays' in London. Will you Marry me? I have little to Ofer, save a fond Heart, and I see no chance of Coming off the Sea short of a General Peace, and God knows when That will bee, if ever. But there you are. Prithee be kind, and send me Hope of the future.

Wether you Do, or don't, tho', I subscribe myself with All good Wishes,

Yr obt hble svt,
James Collishawe.

Bewildered, reluctantly abashed, Fellowes was yet entirely skeptical.

"I'll not believe it," he cried. "'Tis a blind! Can't you see that? They are clever, abominably clever."

"I grant you, Lion," returned Sopher, "but 'tis the one piece of evidence we find, and it upholds Miss Inglepin's story."

Fellowes studied the letter through narrowed eyes.

"'Tis honest, but—Do you believe, Nimrod, that the captain of a British man-o'-war came ashore, with twenty men and a boat-gun, to pay a call on a woman? Do you believe that others will believe it?"

Sopher shrugged his shoulders.

"How matters it what we believe—or others? There'll be talk, and people will say Inglepin and his daughter are disloyal. But that is said already. And talk is not legal evidence."

Mrs. Rhodes, listening to their debate, struck in swiftly:

"I dunno 'baout what other folks'll b'lieve, but I can tell ye right naow, Nimrod Sopher, Miss ain't happy over what she's done—or ain't done. She didn't want for me to take that letter, not one bit."

"Ah! I think I'll return it to her," Fellowes said, and walked down the hall to the parlor door.

"Come in," Cara Inglepin answered his knock.

She was sitting on the sofa as when he had first seen her, drinking a glass of wine. The duenna was beside her, dumbly protective. Her father and Chater, talking restrainedly in a far corner, met Fellowes with frankly hostile glances.

"Is it necessary for you to annoy us further, sir?" demanded Inglepin.

Fellowes ignored the question.

"I regret we felt obliged to take this from you, ma'am." He placed the letter in the listless hand she put out for it. "You have my apologies for the intrusion. I am confident Captain Collishawe is too honorable a man to have intended it should be used to cover a political intrigue."

A Search of the House Produced a Quantity of Correspondence.

The startled look she gave him was his reward.

"Your confidence does you honor, sir," she acknowledged gratefully. "And, oh, Captain Fellowes—"

"Daon't ye talk to him, Miss Cara," Chater interrupted. "I'll thank ye to git out o' my house, and stay out, Fellowes. Ye ain't got no excuse for bidin' a minit. I'll have the law on ye, if ye bother me ag'in."

"Try the law, you fool," Fellowes retorted contemptuously. "I'm done with it."

Passing out the parlor door he heard Cara Inglepin catch her breath, and understood she was shocked anew at the spectacle of his scarred back. But he was puzzled that this sign of remorse should inspire him with pity rather than exultation. He resolved to root out all pity from his heart, lest it undermine the strength of his hatred.

• • • • • • • •

Fellowes awakened slowly, conscious of an unaccustomed sense of luxury. Sunshine was warm in his face, soft linen caressed his body. It was very different from the berth-deck of the Badger. He was in his own room at the Manor. A suit of clothes hung on a chair, all brushed and neat. Towels were draped on a rack. Evidently, some one had been busy putting a disused house in order while he slept. He learned who that some one was when the Widow Rhodes' voice drifted in to him through a door that stood ajar.

"Come right in, Nimrod. If he ain't up yet, it's time he was riz. A man can't more'n sleep the clock 'raound in comfort."

Fellowes slid out of bed, chuckling, languidly satisfied. The world seemed good after twenty-four hours' rest. And he was home. He strolled to the window, and the world turned gloomy in a moment. Beyond the maples, and the creek fields and the creek, itself, he saw the lane winding from Chater's house to the South Country road, and rolling along in a shower of dust a cumbersome post-chaise. While he watched, it lurched around a corner and vanished under the thick leafage of the trees lining the main road.

His face was so grim that when Sopher entered the room the lawyer nodded understandingly.

"Good morning, Lion, good morning, my dear fellow!" he exclaimed with a patent effort at cheeriness. "You are the better for a proper sleep, I see. And watching our—ah—antagonists' departure. Returning to the city, I believe. Let us hope, a thought chastened by their experience."

How Come?

Why is it that the boys win a great majority of debates with girls in high school and invariably lose their skill after marriage?—Rochester Democrat and Chronicle.

Breaks Both Legs Turning Over in Bed

Winsted, Conn.—While turning over in bed at his home on the Norfolk road recently Frank B. Bowman broke a leg. He was brought to a hospital here for treatment. A few days later, while moving from one position to another in bed, he fractured the other leg. Both are now in plaster casts. Bowman has been an invalid for more than three years.

HYPNOTIC THIEF BEING HUNTED

Wanted by European Police for Many Crimes.

Montreal.—A "hypnotic robber," or possibly a pair of them, is causing concern to European police. The first instance which came to police notice occurred recently on an international express train between Paris and Warsaw. A well dressed, modest young lady got into a conversation with a fellow traveler. While the two were alone for a few moments the traveler fell unaccountably asleep. On waking he found his pocketbook and money gone. In another instance a Polish noblewoman became acquainted with a young man claiming to be a French count.

While the two were sitting in a garden the noblewoman also fell asleep suddenly and awoke to find herself robbed of jewels and money. She reported, however, a dim memory of hearing her companion's voice repeating, just as she was dropping into irresistible slumber, the familiar hypnotist's formula: "Sleep, look into my eyes; sleep!" Although this is the only instance of actual recollection of anything like hypnotism, other individuals in different places have reported falling asleep after meeting a strange young man or woman and waking later to find their valuables gone. It is suspected that some criminal with considerable knowledge of hypnotism and able to masquerade either as a man or woman has devised this method of preying upon travelers. Mental experts point out, however, that the best preventive of such robberies is publicity, for it is unlikely that any intended victim who has been forewarned and is on his guard ever can be hypnotized by a casual acquaintance, even were the stranger the most skillful hypnotist in the world.

80-Year-Old Indian Shows Race's Nerve

Los Angeles, Calif.—The traditional stoicism and hardihood of the Santacota Indians has been preserved to the very last living member of the tribe, and Esteban Falari, eighty, lies in a ward of the Santa Barbara hospital with his thigh encased in a paleface doctor's plaster cast, but serenely happy that he was able to justify the best tradition of his race.

Esteban, last of the Santa Cotas, and last of the Santa Ynez mission Indians, lives in a hermit cabin back in the wilds of the Santa Ynez river. Four times a year, he emerges for supplies. Last week, he was riding one horse and leading another, heavily laden with supplies, up the river, when he dismounted to rest and in doing so, fell and fractured his thigh.

Unable to move, Esteban lay for three days on the rocks, suffering keenly from his injury and from exposure to an unusually hot sun by day and unusually cold weather at night. His horses wandered away. He had no water, nor food. He began to doubt his ability to hold out.

At last, came another traveler and Esteban was discovered. He was rushed to the hospital, a cast was set and the venerable Indian put to bed.

Husband Locks Wife Three Days in Icebox

Los Angeles, Calif.—If the wife gets obstreperous, put her in cold storage and let her cool off. This was the policy literally pursued by William Klug, according to the story told to Superior Judge Blake by Mrs. Rosa Klug.

According to the wife's plaint, Mr. Klug put her in a hugh icebox, locked the door from the outside and left her for three days. Eventually her brother happened along and released her from the chilly prison.

The story came out when Klug filed suit for divorce. Determined that he should not gain the decree, Mrs. Klug filed a cross complaint. Apparently Judge Blake does not approve of the cold storage of wives, for he granted the chilled wife's petition.

Falls Three Stories and Gets Only Minor Bruises

Syracuse, N. Y.—George Dowling, thirty-seven, plunged head first 35 feet from the third story of the Rescue mission and lives to tell the story. It is believed he struck a ledge, turned and landed on his feet. He suffered only bruises on the left arm, shoulders and legs. All he remembers is going to bed and then waking up on the sidewalk.

Shot by Own Gun

Hedgesville, W. Va.—While using his gun as a club to kill a squirrel, Norris [illegible] of this place, was shot and slightly wounded.

Her Note in the Wrong Car

By H. LOUIS RAYBOLD

(Copyright.)

MARCIA CARROLL, finding herself downtown in the neighborhood of her fiance's office, decided to take advantage of the fact and ride home with him. She knew just where he parked his car and could sit in it and wait for him.

She still had about twenty minutes before closing time and sauntered leisurely down the busy street. As she had expected, his car stood in its usual place. Had it not been there, she would hardly have known how to find it out of a dozen other exactly like it.

She was about to climb into the back seat as a more comfortable place to rest until Bert's arrival, when she saw a white bit of paper tucked in between the body of the car and the front door.

Her first thought was that Bert had left a note, although why he should did not at the moment occur to her any more than it occurred to her that there might be anything of a private nature about the communication—if communication it were. She and Bert had been engaged for several months and good friends for many years. They had never had any secrets from each other.

After she had read the scribbled lines, however, she sat very still, biting her lip and staring straight ahead with eyes that saw nothing.

"Will be waiting for you at the library, sweetheart. Pick me up there.
"B. R."

B. R.! B. R.! Marcia searched her brain for the name of any girl beginning with these initials whom Bert might know. Betty Rackham was the nearest she could come to it and it simply couldn't be Betty. Why, Betty had only been married to Tom Rackham a year and went about quite openly and shamelessly adoring him.

Still, thought Marcia, wouldn't that be exactly what a person would do who was secretly carrying on an affair with somebody else?

At the mere thought of anything between Bert and Betty or between him and some unknown B. R. bitter pangs of jealousy stabbed at her heart.

And because she was young and not very worldly-wise she made a wrong decision. Instead of confronting Bert with the note, she decided to say nothing at all about it but to let him give himself away and confirm her suspicions. But Bert failed to tumble into them.

But the days passed and she discovered nothing further to trouble her. The day of their wedding was nearing and already Marcia wished she had mentioned the matter at the time. Otherwise, she feared that its shadow would some time cloud their perfect happiness.

There came an afternoon when an errand to the city for material for the dressmaker who was making her trousseau gave her a really good excuse for coming out with Bert. For some time she had been too busy to do this and the affair of the note was rapidly being forgotten under the stress of the numerous wedding preparations.

It came as a shock, therefore, when, as she approached the car preoccupied with her thoughts, she saw a glimmer of white between the body and the front door exactly as before.

Marcia seized it and read it without scruple.

"Darlingest:

"May be late. If I'm not here when you come, better pick me up at corner of Greene and Howe. B."

Well, this time she would certainly have it out with Bert. Unless he could explain satisfactorily—which, of course, she reminded herself with a little choke, he couldn't—she would break off everything right then and there.

She couldn't believe, at that, that it was Betty Rackham. There were plenty of girls, probably some of them right in Bert's office, whose initials were B. R.

Then she saw Betty Rackham coming down the street, looking anxiously at each car she passed.

Reaching Marcia, she heaved a sigh of relief. "Well, hello, there. Glad we're going to have a passenger. You know I never know where to find Tom's car. He simply will park it all over the lot. I didn't expect to get through so early and left a note—well, where is it? I have the worst luck with notes. Here's another one gone! Did you see—

But Marcia grabbed Betty's arm as she dropped her packages in the back seat. "Is this your car, Betty?" she asked.

"Why, sure. Did you think—well, that's right. We both have these poor man's blessings, haven't we? Yes, this is our number."

Marcia hoped she did not look as foolish as she felt. "Yes, I did take it for Bert's. So I'll do a Sherlock Holmes and find the other one."

She saw the whole thing now. Just as she had this time mistaken Betty's car for Bert's, so Betty had on the occasion of the other note, mistaken Bert's for Tom's. Finding Bert's now, she got in and waited for him.

They were on their way home when Marcia, taking advantage of the semi-twilight to nestle her head on Bert's shoulder, said suddenly, "I will never have any secrets from you, darling."

"It's O. K. with me!" said Bert cheerfully.

Old Town Renews Life

Once Weymouth, N. J., was a prosperous town, but it was off the beaten track. One by one families moved to larger cities until only a few old settlers remained. The town became deserted and for several years no rent has been charged the few residents willing to stay in the old town. Now a water company has run a line into the town and a service fee of 10 cents a month has been placed on every house and the tenants are required to pay the fee.

Popular

Reports are seeping in that New Jersey is striving to emulate California. A real estate man in Camden tried to sell a lot to a Californian. The deal was moving along just so-so when the Californian heard something.

"What is that awful humming he demanded suspiciously.

"Oh, just the theme song for a mosquito revue," was the prompt reply.—Los Angeles Times.

Criticism

Father, mother and the two youngsters were dinner guests of some friends. The hostess served a special dessert which she knew the little guests liked.

Martin looked at his dish and said to his mother:

"We fill ours fuller than this, don't we?"

Politics Inevitable

"I think I shall keep out of politics," said the young man.

"What are you going to do," rejoined Senator Sorghum, "be a hermit?"—Washington Star.

Good Reason

"Why don't you marry the doctor?"

"Because then I could not decide for myself when I was ill enough to go to the seaside."—Passing Show.

When "Merry Christmas" Will Do Lots of Good

BIG snow flakes caressed the farmhouse of Garth Mason and lingered at the window sills—a frame for holly wreaths. Inside every one but Garth chattered happily. He stared through a window toward a distant light.

"But he ought to make the first move," Garth muttered stubbornly. Finally, impelled by something stronger than will, Garth jerked on his coat and strode forth.

In the doorway of his "hard" neighbor Garth paused self-consciously.

"—Just brought—Christmas eve, you know—a little present—" he awkwardly extended a new pipe gayly wrapped. "Wanted to say, 'Merry Christmas—'"

Garth stopped. His hollow-eyed "enemy" had only partially risen from his chair. John Clark was sick! Long the man talked. John had been haunted, too, by the old misunderstanding.

"Felt that—if I could only see you I'd get well," he faltered. Already he looked improved.

Christmas Flames That Brought Reconciliation

WHAT a party! Lois Dorr, "the Spirit of Christmas," stood by the tree and called out the names from the presents Santa handed her. "Eddie Hines; Bob Hall; Maggie Snyder." What happy children! What a fat Santa! What a glorious Christmas—if only Jim— It was a shame to quarrel at Christmas time, but Jim was so stubborn!

She brushed back the flowing veil that draped her head. "Mary Carr?" There was Jim in the corner. He needn't speak, then! "Barbara Carr." He would certainly apologize before she would speak. "Rita Sanders." He mustn't catch her staring at him—

Lois Dorr whirled, her veil waved out behind her, and caught on the tree. In a second the flimsy stuff was aflame.

Through the instant panic came Jim. He snuffed out the fire, and—disregarding the interest he was creating—took her in his arms. "Lois, you'll forgive me?"

She nodded. "Let's go into the other room, Jim. It's quiet, and there's some lovely mistletoe."—Helen Gulsford.

Six Hundred Pairs of Feet in Christmas Shoes

GIVE the honors to the Christmas season. It has come to be a moral force—a civilizing influence of unmeasured power. A western business man gave six hundred urchins of the street a Christmas present of six hundred pairs of shoes.

Who can measure the effect of putting six hundred pairs of feet into six hundred pairs of shoes and Christmas joy into the empty lives of six hundred struggling boys? It made Christmas the brightest spot in all their years. It brought the vision of hope and gave a nobler conception of the world. It turned six hundred pairs of feet, for a time at least, into the paths that lead toward success. Many of them will reach the goal.

Those shoes, perhaps, will turn a score of boys, poorly born, away from a career of crime and give to the world a score of strong and helpful men. The unselfish impulses prompted by the Christmas spirit have never been the urge to indolence or crime.—William L. Goston.

Orange Once a Berry

Scientists who have looked up the pedigree of the orange say that it was formerly a berry and that it has been in the course of development for 7,000 years.

Important Notice

Under date of Nov. 29th, a notice was published in the Postal Bulletin calling attention to an order previously published that all Christmas stamps and seals must be placed on the back side and not on the address side of letters, cards, and parcels.

The address of the sender should always be placed in the upper left hand corner of all letters and parcels, and they should always be addressed with pen and ink and not a pencil.

Over a million letters are sent to the dead letter office every year, because they haven't a return address.

H. O. Hanson, Publisher. Holt, Marshall County, Minnesota; Friday, January 3, 1930. Volume 19; Number 36.

Editor on Sick List

H. O. Hanson, editor and publisher of the Holt Weekly News, left by car on Friday for Huron, S. D., to spend some time in getting treatments for a bad case of gastric ulcers with which he has been bothered for some time. His brother, Peter, who visited here during the Christmas holidays, returned with him to his home there.

We all hope that Hans will get over his illness speedily, and that he will soon be back in our midst dispensing humor and gathering news. The whole community joins in wishing him luck.

The Weather

We have had some regular spring weather since the latter part of last week. As we go to press Thursday we notice that the air is colder and that a few big snowflakes are hurtling thru the air from the northwest. One would almost think it was winter.

Auto and Chauffer Licences at Crookston

In order to give better and more prompt service to the car owners of Northwestern Minnesota, the Secretary of State has established a branch office of the Minnesota Motor Vehicle Department at Crookston and appointed A. E. Morck as Deputy Registrar

A complete stock of automobile and truck licence plates is carried by the Deputy, as well as all necessary forms of application blanks, which enables the car owner calling at this office to secure his licence plates at once, provided he has his last year's registration card or, in the registration of a new car, a Bill of Sale from the Dealer from whom it was bought. Mail order applications are not handled by this office, except upon the payment of a special fee.

Mr. Morck is also commissioned to give Chauffeur's Examinations and tests, and every person who is employed for the purpose of driving a car or truck belonging to another person, or who uses his own car or truck in hauling persons or property for hire, must take an examination and secure a Chauffeur's or driver's licence. This includes all drivers of passenger and school buses, freight trucks, delivery trucks, gravel trucks, etc. This examination may be taken at the Deputy Registrar's office at any time during office hours.

The Crookston Registration office is located at 112 N. Broadway in the Abstract Building, immediately south of the Crookston Hotel.

N. S. A. News

Following a two weeks holiday recess, the Northwest School of Agriculture will open for the winter term on Monday, January 6. Many new students who could not be spared from home during the fall are expected to enroll at this time. As the winter term closes March 28, it makes a most convenient time for farm boys and girls to continue their education.

J. W. Milnar, registrar, states that the work is so arranged that all credits earned during the winter term can be applied on the total requirement for graduation.

Girls may select courses in dressmaking, foods and cookery, nursing, English, mathematics, history, spelling, and penmanship. Boys' courses include courses in English, spelling, penmanship, livestock, dairying, poultry, farm crops, arithmetic, shop work, motors, farm machinery, horticulture, and history.

Special instruction in voice, piano, or violin, in addition to opportunities offered by membership in the glee clubs, choruses, or orchestra will also be available to new students.

Total expenses for the term should not exceed $80.00. This includes board, room, flat laundry, textbooks, health service, and entertainment.

With an outstanding corps of trained instructors, homelike supervision, and unsurpassed equipment, the Northwest School offers unusual opportunities for the young men and women of Northwestern Minnesota to continue their education.

North Dakota Wheat Sold in Canada

Dr. C. B. Clingman of Oelwein and his brother, D. E. B. Clingman of Iowa City, sold 4000 bushels of wheat recently from their farm near Portal, N. D., on the Canadian line. The elevator on the Canadian side was paying $1.30 a bushel so they sold in Canada, paying 12 cents duty and 1 cent exchange and still netting about $400 more for their grain than if sold in this country. All grain from that section of North Dakota was being hauled across the line. The Canadian government railroads charge 6 cents per bushel less for freight, but still there is a wide margin which nobody seems able to account for. Elevators on the U. S. side of the line were offering $1.06 for wheat; 42c for barley against 63c across the line; 29c for oats against 50; 72c for rye against 92c. The duty on barley is 15c, oats 10c, and rye 10c. On the other hand flax seed is 6c higher in Dakota than in Canada.—The Maquoketa (Iowa) Excelsior.

No wonder American interests regard the Canadian Wheat Pool with such affectionate looks! Well, why can't we sort of get organized here so that the American grain grower can enjoy the same prices as his brother across the line?

Sunday School Program

The Christmas program given in the church Thursday evening by the Sunday school children was very well attended. Though the children had rehearsed the program only a few times, they did very well, and some of the numbers were excellent.

The choir also sang two selections which took very well with the crowd. Rev. Redal gave a short speech at the end of the program. Then candy was distributed to the children, and apples were passed around to everyone present.

Fire Destroys Baudette Bldg.

Baudette's largest business block, the Williams building, was completely destroyed by fire early Thursday morning, causing a loss estimated at $140,000. Three of the village's biggest stores were wiped out, three professional men lost their equipment, and five families were rendered homeless as a result of the conflagration. No one was hurt, but several of those living upstairs over the business places had narrow escapes from death, getting out of the burning building in their night clothes.

The losses were partially covered by insurance.

Closed Bank Pays 3 Mills on Dollar

What is believed to be the smallest final settlement ever made by a defunct bank was paid out recently by the Scadinavian-American State Bank of Badger. Although this was the first payment that has been made since the bank closed, and will be the last, depositors received only three mills on the dollar. A $1000 deposit brought a dividend check of $3.00. Checks were issued in as small amounts as 5 cents, on a claim of $15.

PRODUCTION: Handling dairy cows is like a horse race—a great deal depends upon the start. For a cow to produce 300 or more pounds of butterfat a year, she must be made to hit a stride of better than a pound of butterfat a day at the beginning—40 pounds of fat the first month. The fresh cow that is neglected very seldom makes up later on. Give the fresh cow the first and the best attention on the farm.
MANUFACTURING: Cream will not sour as quickly in cold weather as in warm, but there are many other conditions that spoil the fine flavor of pure sweet cream. Strong flavored feeds such as cabbage and rutabagas fed a few hours before milking, unclean separator and strainer and cans, the cream set without cooling in cold water, and exposed to the odors of vegetables or cooked foods—all lower the quality of the cream.
MARKETING: Great fluctuation in price is a bad thing for producers It creates an unevenness in consumption. Co-operative marketing aims to overcome prices going too low and too high. It is only through co-operative marketing that great fluctuations can be prevented. A steady market is best for both producers and consumers. Speculators aim to profit through drops and rises.

FIRST NATIONAL FUR SHOW IS ANNOUNCED

With the approach of cold weather thoughts of fur and trapping are in the minds of every trapper, boy or man. The call of the trapline is urging hundreds of thousands of red-blooded Americans to inspect their traps and plan their sets for the coming season. And this year a new zest has been added to make trapping more profitable for shippers. The First National Raw Fur Show offering $5,000 in cash has been officially announced by the Sears-Roebuck Agricultural Foundation. The show will take place in Chicago from April 15 to May 1. Beginning now, entries may be sent to any one of the six Sears, Roebuck Raw Fur Marketing Service branches. In order to compete, pelts must be legally taken during the 1929-30 fur season and must be received not later than April 15, 1930.

Johnny Muskrat, official broadcaster on fur and trapping, in speaking of the show stated that all fur shippers regardless of where they live or the kinds of fur animals they trap, will have the same chance of sharing in the $5,000 because pelts are to be judged primarily on skill used in skinning, stretching, and drying, and not on section of origin or value of species. Johnny went on to say, "I consider that this show will prove a great boon to fur shippers by showing them how more careful preparation of pelts for market will increase the prices paid. Not only will each fur shipper have an opportunity to win up to $2,000 in cash, but also he will get the highest possible market prices for his pelts. There will be entries from all parts of the United States and Alaska, North, South, East, and West and I expect the furs chosen for final exhibit to be the finest collection of raw pelts ever assembled. Nationally known fur authorities will be the final judges. The show will not only demonstrate to trappers how they can realize higher returns through better handling but will also be in line with the policy of conserving the nation's fur resources by encouraging trapping only the very finest and primest of pelts."

Mother Finds Her Sons Murdered

Intuition Leads Her to Abandoned Well Where Bodies Were Hidden.

Texarkana, Ark.—Intuition of a mother which led her to an abandoned well where she saw the hand of one of her two missing sons protruding from the water thirty feet below has disclosed one of the most gruesome double murders in the history of Miller county, Ark., and at the same time, one of the most baffling mysteries.

"A moonshiners' feud" was the first supposition of authorities. However, bits of evidence gathered here and there since the day the dual killing was brought to light indicate that there may have been a deeper motive—just what, is the question baffling officials.

It was on the morning of November 4 that Lee Matson, twenty-three, and his brother, Arthur, nineteen, armed with shotguns, told their folks in their little farm house, fourteen miles east of Texarkana, that they were going squirrel hunting.

Boys Go Hunting.

"If we are not back by night, you had better hunt for us, and if we are not back by morning, be sure to hunt us," they warned their family as they departed.

They failed to return that night, and were missing next morning. The family silently began their search. The hill country and the adjoining Red river bottom land were scoured. Ravines were explored, and caves were searched. Kinsmen from the surrounding country were called to aid, but the search was in vain.

Then the mother, Mrs. H. E. Matson, grasped at an idea. With two daughters, Mrs. Mary Norseen and Pearl Matson, and the two-months bride of Lee, one of the missing sons, she went to the home of an uncle, Irvin Martin, to inquire if there were any abandoned wells in that section.

Martin recalled that a farmhouse seven miles from the Matson home had burned a few months before and that a dug well was on the place. The four women and the uncle went to the scene. Near the burned timbers that remained of the house they observed the well, covered with brush and pieces of burned timbers. They detected a faint odor of decaying flesh. Peering into the well the searchers could see nothing at first, but as their eyes grew accustomed to the darkened hole they observed something in the water. It was a human hand extending upward.

Sheriff Fleet Magee of Miller county and several men residing in the vicinity were called. Efforts to pull the body from the shaft with hooks failed, and a man was lowered on a rope. He discovered two bodies, and they were hauled to the top with another rope.

Riddled With Shot.

Exactly two weeks from the day they last left their home the bodies of the two youthful Matson brothers, riddled with shot, were brought to light.

Each youth had been shot three times, twice in the back and once in the head. Wads from the shells indicated that they had been shot at close range. Within five hours after the shot-riddled bodies were found Foos Coe, thirty-five, ex-convict, and his sweetheart, pretty Ola Owens, twenty, of Annona, Texas., were confined in the county jail as suspects. Both steadfastly refused to talk about the murders.

"The two boys were not ambushed—they were executed by a firing squad," declares Prosecuting Attorney J. D. Cook, Jr. In the opinion of the prosecutor the two brothers went to the still operated by themselves, Coe and probably others. Then, he believes, Coe and his companions marched the youths into the dense woods ahead of them and poured a deadly volley into their backs.

During the past three years Coe has served one year in prison and six months in jail for liquor law violations, paid a $500 fine on another, was dismissed on two state liquor charges, one charge of grand larceny and one of carrying concealed weapons. On a charge of assault with intent to kill in connection with firing into an automobile the charge was reduced to aggravated assault and he was fined $50 and given one day in jail.

Few women tell all their secrets.

Prisoner to Serve on Installment Plan

Vancouver, Wash.—Now comes a prison term on the installment plan. Fred Lewis, convicted of driving an automobile while intoxicated and sentenced to 45 days in jail, told Judge George B. Simpson, of Clark county, he would lose his job if compelled to serve the whole term at once. He asked that he be allowed to devote his annual fifteen day vacation to it. The jurist granted the request.

OUR LEADERSHIP IN WORLD PEACE BEGAN 200 YEARS AGO

William Penn Proposed World Parliament and Washington Sponsored Arbitration Plan.

New York.—Although the first notable assurances of world peace have been achieved in the past ten years, between Wilson's sponsorship of the League of Nations and the Hoover-MacDonald conference, American leadership in the movement for world-wide amity and the renunciation of war dates back more than 200 years.

This is the significant fact brought out by Florence B. Boeckel, who traces the history of world peace movement from its inception in the current issue of Good Housekeeping Magazine.

Even while America was still colonial "William Penn and another Quaker, John Bellers, laid plans before the sovereigns of Europe for the creation of an international parliament to maintain peace," says the writer. "In order to avoid the troublesome question of precedence, Penn proposed that the representatives of the various nations meet in a round room which should have "diverse doors to come in and go out at."

Although arbitration was practiced by the Grecian states, the practice lapsed until George Washington revived it in modern times and it was by his direction that John Jay negotiated the first arbitration treaty of modern history, with England. Arbitration remained thereafter an American principle but it was not until the settlement of the Alabama claims between England and the United States after the Civil war that the method attracted favorable attention in Europe.

"Before the World war no treaties, except as between Latin-American countries and Spain, agreed to submit any and all disputes to this method of peaceful settlement," says the Good Housekeeping writer. "Since the war nearly 100 treaties have been signed by European nations admitting 'all questions whatsoever' to peaceful settlement."

It was William Ladd, an American, who founded in 1915 the first national organization with the avowed purpose of working for world peace, the article shows, and it was Ladd whose plans for an international court to settle disputes between nations provided the basis of the tribunal set up at The Hague peace conference.

To illustrate how the idea of international co-operation and renunciation of war has advanced in recent years, the writer points out that "when shortly after the Civil war, Julia Ward Howe went abroad to rouse the mothers of the world to unite in a women's peace crusade to protect their young against war, she was denied the privilege of speaking at peace gatherings."

THEN AND THERE

HISTORY TOLD AS IT WOULD BE WRITTEN TODAY

By IRVIN S. COBB

How Nero Destroyed His Mother

Fewer crueler humans than the Emperor Nero ever lived, but even so history did him a cruel injustice. Posterity remembered him only as a monster, forgetting that he was an open-handed patron of the arts, a lover and a creator of beautiful things. His reign always has been popularly associated with the martyrdoms of the Early Christians. It merely happened that Nero was the first of the Roman Emperors actively to persecute the Christians. Certain of his successors tortured and killed infinitely greater numbers of the members of the new sect than he had, but because he was the pioneer among those imperial oppressors, the fathers of the Church dubbed him anti-Christ, and the hard name has clung like a burr to his memory through all the nineteen centuries following. That he actually instigated the burning of Rome is almost surely untrue. But forever mankind will go on picturing him as engaging in mock lamentations over a vast holocaust of his own designing.

As a matter of sober fact it would appear that at his worst Nero was no worse than a vast majority of his contemporaries of the ancient world. He merely had more power, greater opportunities for excess than they had—that's all. At his best, he would appear in critical taste, in appreciation of music, and poetry and sculpture and oratory and architecture, as measuring up to favorable comparison with the better minds of his generation.

If sexually he was not so depraved as some who came after him to sit upon the throne of the Empire, he was depraved enough, in all conscience! Wantonly he slew no more of his friends, his councilors, his kinspeople and his supporters, than did sundry other Roman rulers; but at least he picked for his more outstanding victims persons of such prominence that the world must take special cognizance of the murderous tally which he piled up. His golden sandals tracked through human blood all the days of his reign. He lived by violence and throve on it and, by violence, when his race was run, the fat debauchee died.

One act in particular became the reddest star in his crown of eternal infamy. To his other crimes he added the most unnatural of all crimes—the crime of matricide. His mother was the very incarnation of evil craft and malignant intentions. To win for her son the diadem, she made away with all who stood between him and that goal. In his behalf her ambition was as constant as it was unrelenting. But when he reached the pinnacle he destroyed her as readily as he destroyed any lesser creature who had annoyed or frightened him. Having made him what he was, Agrippina still sought to rule and to control her beast of a son. Chafing under her scoldings and resentful of her intrigues, he had her put to death.

It is with the murder of Nero's mother by Nero's order that the article appearing here deals. In his deathless "Annals," that greatest of all the older historians, Caius Cornelius Tacitus, who had been born during the time of Nero, recorded with circumstantial detail the facts regarding the fate of Agrippina. We may be quite sure that in reading what Tacitus wrote we read the sober truth.

Here is what he said of his own purpose: "I regard it as history's highest function to rescue merit from oblivion and to hold up as a terror to base words and actions the reprobation of posterity."

Tacitus knew what he was talking about—a rare enough thing among the earliest of the chroniclers. What was still rarer, he knew how to set forth his narrative with terseness and force. In our gallery of eye-witnesses he stands pre-eminent.

TACITUS had the knack rare among writers of his time and none too common in our own day of condensing a narrative into terseness without sacrificing any of its vigor.

Nowhere in his voluminous writings did he exhibit more powerfuly his ability to draw a picture with the fewest possible number of lines than in his account of the murder of Agrippina, the heartless mother of Nero, by the order of her even more cruel and unnatural son. They were of the same pattern, these two, but with this difference, namely: that whereas the son lacked utterly in all sense of filial regard, the maternal instinct of love never wavered in Agrippina. It was she who with her crimes and her intrigues had put him upon the throne of the Caesars only to be destroyed by the creature of her own making. Indeed there is reason to believe that she had premonition of the fate destined for her as is proven by the concluding words of the following narrative of Tacitus:

"Nero now began to shun all private interviews with his mother; whenever she withdrew to her gardens or her villa at Tusculum, or to the neighborhood of Antium, he would commend her for seeking retirement. At last, feeling her existence a heavy burden to him wherever she might be, he resolved to put her to death, the only matter of deliberation with him being whether he should get rid of her by poison, by the dagger, or by some other violent means. His first resolve was to take her off by poison. But if poison should be given to her at the emperor's table it could not be imputed to accident, for Britannicus had already perished by the same means; to tamper with the attendants of Agrippina appeared hazardous, for her experience in crime had made her vigilant against treachery and she had fortified herself against poisons by the habit of taking antidotes. If the dagger was employed nobody could suggest how the murder could be concealed; and Nero feared that, whoever was selected to commit so great a crime, might refuse to obey the emperor's commands.

"Anicetus, a freedman, offered the resources of his invention. He was the commander of the fleet at Misenum, had been engaged in the education of Nero, and he and Agrippina hated one another. He told Nero that a vessel might be so constructed that part of it could be detached when the vessel was afloat and Agrippina thrown into the water before she was aware of it; that nothing gave so many chances of accident as the sea; and if Agrippina should perish in the wreck, who could be so unreasonable as to impute to crime what was the fault of the winds and the waves? That, when Agrippina was dead, the emperor could build a temple and erect altars to her memory and make other demonstrations of filial affection. The device was approved and it was favored by the time, for Agrippina was in the habit of attending the festival of the Quinquatrus at Baiae. To that place Nero lured his mother, often declaring 'that sons ought to bear with the angry passions of their parents and try to pacify them,' in order that he might give rise to reports of a reconciliation and that Agrippina might believe it, for women are easily disposed to believe anything that pleases them. . . .

"Among the rest of the vessels one more highly ornamented than the others was lying there, as if this also were designed to do honor to his mother, for she had been accustomed to sail in a trirene and have a body of rowers belonging to the fleet. She was also invited to a banquet, that advantage might be taken of the night to conceal the crime. It was well ascertained that some one betrayed the treacherous design of Nero; and Agrippina, being informed of it, and doubtful whether to give credit to it or not, was carried to Baiae in a litter. The blandishments of her son removed her fears.

She was kindly received and had a place at table assigned to her above Nero. Sometimes adopting the ordinary familiarity of youth and then assuming a more serious air, as if his purpose was to mingle business and pleasure, Nero prolonged the entertainment by varied conversation; and when Agrippina rose to go away he accompanied her to the seashore, keeping his eyes steadily fixed upon her and pressing her to his bosom, either to fill up the measure of his simulation, or it may be that the last sight of a mother who was going to her death absorbed all the thoughts of his mind, brutal though he was.

The Silent Victim.

"The gods had given a starlight night and a tranquil sea, as if to furnish evidence of the crime. The ship had not advanced far, with two of the intimate friends of Agrippina who accompanied her, Crepereius Gallus, who was standing not far from the helm, and Acerronia, who was lying at the feet of her mistress and joyfully speaking of the change in Nero's temper and his reconciliation with his mother, when, on a signal being given, the roof of the place, which was loaded with lead, tumbled down, and Crepereius was immediately crushed to death. Agrippina and Acerronia were protected by the sides of the chamber, which happened to be strong enough to resist the weight; nor did the vessel fall in pieces, for most of the men on board were in a state of alarm; and those who were unacquainted with the design (and they were the greater part) impeded the movements of those who were privy to it. The rowers advised that the vessel should be thrown on one side and thus sunk. But neither could the rowers promptly come to an agreement about such a measure at the moment, and the rest by resisting it allowed Agrippina and her attendant to fall more gently into the sea.

"While Acerronia, who lost her presence of mind, was calling out that she was Agrippina and imploring help for the emperor's mother, she was despatched with boat-poles and oars and other naval implements which chanced to be in the way. Agrippina kept silent, and was consequently not so well recognized but yet she received one wound on her shoulder. She swam till she fell in with some boats by which she was conveyed into the Lucrine lake and thence to her own villa. There turning over in her mind the various circumstances—that it was expressly for this purpose that she had been invited by treacherous letters and treated with particular distinction; that it was near the shore, without being driven by the winds or dashed against rocks, that the upper part of the vessel had fallen in, just as any construction on land might have done; considering, too, the death of Acerronia and casting her eyes on her own wound; reflecting that the only protection against treachery was to affect not to see it—she sent her freedman, Agerinus, to tell her son that by the blessing of the gods and her own good fortune she had escaped a grievous accident; she entreated him, however alarmed he might be at his mother's danger, to defer the trouble of paying her a visit. In the meantime, assuming an appearance of being perfectly at ease, she dressed her wound and used warm applications to her body. She ordered the testament of Acerronia to be sought for and her goods to be sealed.

A Bit of Stage Business.

"Nero, who was waiting for the news of the completion of his crime, received intelligence that Agrippina had escaped with no further injury than a slight blow; she had just been in danger enough to leave no doubt in her mind who had planned it.

"Half dead with terror and crying out that his mother might be expected every moment, eager for revenge; that she would either arm the slaves or inflame the soldiers or make her way to the senate and people and urge against him the wreck of the vessel, her wound, and the death of her friends. What protection had he against her if Seneca and Burrus could not devise something? and he immediately sent for them. It is doubtful whether they were already acquainted with his designs. Both were silent for some time, either because they thought it useless to attempt to dissuade Nero, or they believed that things had come to that pass that Nero must perish if Agrippina was not removed out of the way. Seneca at last so far took the lead as to look to Burrus and ask whether the soldiers should receive orders to kill Agrippina. Burrus replied that the Praetorians were devoted to all the family of the Caesars; that they cherished the memory of Germanicus and they would not venture on any extreme measure against his children; Anicetus, he said, should perform his promise. Without any hesitation Anicetus asked to be allowed to complete his crime. Upon hearing these words, Nero declared that on that day the empire was really conferred on him, and to a freedman he owed the gift; he bade him go quick and take with him the readiest men to execute his commands. Nero himself, hearing that Agerinus had come to him with a message from Agrippina, adopted a theatrical contrivance to make him look like a criminal; while Agerinus was delivering his message, he threw down a dagger at his feet. He then commanded him to be put in chains, as if he had been detected in an assassination, in order that he might invent a false story of his mother having plotted the destruction of the emperor, and then, through shame at her crime being detected, having committed suicide.

Nero Reigns Over Mother's Body.

"In the meantime, the danger of Agrippina was noised abroad, but only as an accident; and the people as they heard of it hurried to the shore. Some got upon the mole, others into the nearest boats; some waded into the sea as far as they could; and some stretched out their hands; the whole coast was filled with the cries, the prayers, the shouts of people asking various questions or giving uncertain answers. A great multitude crowded thither with lights; and when it was generally known that Agrippina was safe, they were preparing to give her their congratulations, when they were dispersed by the threats of a body of armed men.

"Anicetus posted men about Agrippina's villa, and, bursting open the door, he seized the slaves whom he met before he reached the door of the chamber. A few slaves were standing there; the rest had been frightened away by the soldiers breaking in. In the chamber there was a feeble light and a single female slave. Agrippina was growing more and more uneasy that no messenger came from her son. The face of the shore was now changed; there were solitude and sudden noises and the indications of some extreme calamity. As her slave was going away, Agrippina cried out: 'Do you too leave me?' and seeing Anicetus, accompanied by Herculeus, a captain of a trireme, and Oloriatus, a centurion in the fleet, she said: 'If he had come to see her, he must tell Nero that she was recovered; if he had come to commit a crime, she would not believe that her son was privy to it; he would not command the murder of his mother.' The assassins surrounded the bed, and the commander of the trireme was the first to strike her on the head with a club. The centurion was drawing his sword to kill her, and she was soon despatched with many wounds. So far all agree. As to Nero coming to see the body of his mother, and praising the beauty of her person, there are some authorities that have so stated and there are some that deny it. She was burnt the same night on a banqueting couch and with the meanest ceremonial; nor, so long as Nero was in possession of power, was the earth piled up or covered over."

"By the care of her domestics a slight tumulus was afterwards raised on the place, near the road to Misenum and the villa of the Dictator Caesar, which stands on the highest spot of ground and commands a prospect of the bay below. When the funeral pile was lighted, a freedman of Agrippina, named Mnester, stabbed himself; it is doubtful whether through affection to his mistress or through fear of being put to death. Many years before, Agrippina had believed that this would be her end and she had braved it. For, when she was consulting the Chaldaeans about Nero, they told her that Nero would be emperor and would kill his mother; she replied: 'Let him be my murderer, only let him reign.'"

Seaweed a Sound Killer

When dried the seaweed, common in shallow waters all round our coasts, has the extraordinary quality of killing sound, as well as being an effective insulator against heat and cold. On this account it is being used increasingly in house construction. Besides deadening sound, sea grass does not harbor insects and is practically non-inflammable. It is extensively used in upholstery and mattress making.

"You may hope it," snapped Fellowes, beginning to dress. "I don't. They are on their way to do whatever they arranged with Collishawe."

"Oh, my dear Lion! You are unreasonable. We have no evidence—"

"We have plenty of evidence. What we require is a method of exploiting it. I think Joshua Inglepin is the man for my purpose. If he is, and sees it, we'll lay the story before the federal authorities—and the governor. Is Jeff Riggle still in the village?"

"Yes, he waited on the possibility you might wish his services."

"Send word to the General Armstrong we'll drive west in an hour. Have you any money for me? Enough to buy a ship?"

"And carry on the maintenance of the estate? I fear not, Lion, I fear not. Business is slothful."

"Humph! Then I'll have you look over our titles. See which lands could be disposed of most readily."

"Sell the Manor fields?" Sopher was overwhelmed. "Why, my dear Lion! Not an acre has gone since—But this is absurd. Do listen to reason!"

"There isn't any reason in the situation," Fellowes replied, between strokes of the razor. "I must have a ship, Nimrod, and that means I must have money. Unless I can come to some terms with Joshua Inglepin." His lean, bronzed features were contorted in a scowl. "He hates his brother—as I do. I should think two men who hate the same person would make excellent partners."

"I must deplore the bitterness of your spirit," protested the lawyer. "Hatred is the cause of infinite suffering and misery."

"You have the cart before the horse," rapped Fellowes. "Misery and suffering inspire hate. No, you needn't argue. I appreciate your motives, but my mind is fast."

Sopher looked uncomfortable.

"At the least," he said hesitantly, "allow me to offer my services as counselor and advisor. I should be delighted to accompany you to the city, and—ah—examine any measures suggested in the light of practical and consistent lawfulness."

"No, it won't do," denied Fellowes. And smiled at the lawyer's chagrin. "This isn't an occasion for lawfulness."

"Dear me, Lion, you are most obstinate," sighed Sopher. "And do I understand it's your purpose to put to sea as a privateersman?"

"Yes."

"I shall go with you! I shall accompany you as—as—marine officer. My military services will have equipped me for the duties, and I am sure a number of my corps will enlist with their captain."

Fellowes' smile became a laugh, almost carefree and hearty.

"You shall come, Nimrod," he promised, "and all the Fencibles you can raise. Now shall we sample Mrs. Rhodes' cooking? 'Twill taste more than good to me, after two years of salt horse."

The widow received them at the foot of the stairs.

"Perked up a mite, ain't ye, squire?" she remarked. "Thar's nothin' can master sleep for a tired man, I say and after sleep ye want food."

She led the way into the dining room, where Tom and Cuffee—Tom distinctly sheepish—were cleaning the floor and polishing furniture.

"Naow, then, Tom," she admonished, "we'll do with the sweepin' a while. Cuffee, ye can come outside with me, and fetch in the plates. I'll make a good waiter of ye, yet. After we git the squire settled, ye two can help out at the General Armstrong. I allus wanted a pair o' husky menfolks 'raound the place. Not that I need 'em, specially; but it makes ye feel pert jest to have menfolks 'raound. And Tom, thar, he's cut out for the heavy work. A honest, well-meanin' man, Tom is." She gave him a pat, under which he wiggled ecstatically. "Wantin' a leetle trainin', to be sure, but he'll come on. A couple o' months, and he'll earn his keep. I wouldn't wonder."

"I'm sorry, Mrs. Rhodes," Fellowes answered when he could squeeze a word in, "but we are starting for New York as soon as Jeff Riggle can come for us."

She halted in the kitchen door, arms akimbo.

"Noo Yawk, hey? After that Miss Inglepin, I'll be bound."

"After her and her father—and Chater," Fellowes corrected stiffly.

"Humph!" The widow eyed him shrewdly. "Ain't got much use for her, I take it."

He said nothing.

"Oh, well, ye ain't the fust man calc'lated—Humph! Mebbe I better keep my mouth shut. I'm all upsot. Here I figgered ye'd want the Manor open, and I b'en and swep' and cleaned and brushed and polished 'til my body's crackin'. And ye tell me ye'll shet the place in an hour!"

Fellowes crossed the room, and took one of her red, calloused hands in his.

"Thank you," he said. "It was like you to think of me. And I'll come back again—with Tom and Cuffee—some day."

Mrs. Rhodes blinked her eyes sharply. There was a suspicion of a trickle in each corner.

"'Some day'! That's what men allus say. They come and ye git yerself used to thar dirty ways—and they up and leave ye, keerless as a cat huntin' a new hearth. But they'll come back—'some day,' says they. Humph! Well, all I can tell ye, Squire Fellowes, is, ye'll be happier when ye stop sailin' 'raound killin' folks, and gettin' yerself beat, and I daon't knaow what else—runnin' after gals ye hate, too. That's the queerest tune I ever hopped to. If ye'd made yer mind up to settle daown, all nice and proper, and farm yer land, and raise a fam'ly—"

Her voice receded through the kitchen, and Sopher said hastily:

"I think I'll drive on, Lion. I've had my breakfast. And I'll send Riggle up to you. Miranda is—ah—in a belligerent mood, I judge."

Tom Grogan wagged his head as the lawyer left the room. The sailor was sitting, rather uncomfortably, upon one of the spindly-legged mahogany chairs Fellowes' mother had fetched home from England.

"I dunno what bellygrunt is," he said, "'nless it's kin to gabby; but, whatever 'tis, messmate, did ye ever see the woman could talk as fast and do as much?"

"She's a fine woman, Tom," smiled Fellowes. "And she seems to be fond of you."

"Fond of me, hey? She's fond o' workin' me."

"Well, you won't see her after today."

"And blowed if I don't feel sorry for it," growled Tom. "I like the way she swings a rope's end over me."

He jumped up quickly as the kitchen door swung in, and Mrs. Rhodes' instructions floated through.

"—but if ye ain't got time for no more, Cuffee, the two o' ye can wash up them dishes, and fold up all the furnitchy covers, and lay the druggit on the carpet ag'in in that bedroom, and—"

"Sink me, what a bosun she'd make," Tom whispered awesomely.

CHAPTER VIII

Joshua Inglepin

Jeff Riggle pulled his team to a halt, with a mild: "Whoa-oo-a, thar!" brandishing his whip in either direction along the crest of the low hills overlooking Brooklyn. As fas as could be seen, the countryside was dotted with work-gangs, laboring at the fortifications, which made ugly scars upon the green of fields and orchards.

"Naow, that air's a sight folks come miles to see," he observed. "All the way from Gowanus creek to Wallabout bay. We ain't agoin' to be ketched like we wore in '76, squire. Look to them ships!"

The whip indicated the close-packed anchorages in the East river and off Governor's, Bedloe's, and Ellis islands, hundreds of sail of all dimensions, most of them with their topmasts housed, and tar-barrels capping their mastheads.

"'Madison's nightcaps' folks call them bar'ls," said Jeff. "Shippin's dead. 'Tain't even safe to sail the sound east o' New London—and thar's ships been picked up this side o' New Haven. Coastin'? Thar ain't a coaster put to sea in months, since the blockade was tightened. If 'twasn't for privateerin' and them d—d licensed traders, thar wouldn't be no clearances atall. I ain't holdin' with Charter none, but ye can't argyfy past the point the country wasn't fixed to take on the Britishers. No siree, squire, not by a jugfull! Privateerin'? The auction markets are full o' capture cargoes, and ye couldn't throw a stone in the river and not hit a prize; but thar's a many privateers git took, tharselves and our ships that put to sea to trade stand seven chances into ten o' losin'. So whar does it git us, eh? That's what I crave to knaow."

Guard Against Icebergs

The international ice patrol was organized on an international basis as a result of the international conference for the safety of life at sea, in London, 1913. It resulted from a universal demand for a protection of steamships against icebergs in the North Atlantic area after the loss of the Titanic, in April, 1912. The United States was asked to undertake the management of this service, and agreed to send two vessels to patrol the danger area during iceberg season, March 1 to July 1. Each of the contracting parties consented to bear a share of the cost in proportion to its shipping tonnage.

Rickets Old Disease

Rickets, the disease of childhood which deforms the bones, is thought by modern science to be caused by faulty nutrition and lack of sunlight. Nevertheless, recent discoveries show that the babies of primitive man, as well as those of the ancient dinosaurs and other extinct creatures, suffered as much from rickets as do young children of today. Egyptian mummies and the bones of early American Indians, as well as the primitive religious paintings, disclose the prevalence of the disease.—New York World.

Small European Bird

Probably the smallest bird in Europe is the goldcrest, or kinglet, its total length being about three and a half inches.

Nab Thief Who Hides 14 Hours Under Sofa

Berlin.—There is a young chap whiling away a few months in a Berlin jail, who probably has learned by now that he must be patient if he would succeed in his chosen profession. He broke into a house in the fashionable Tiergarten section some days ago, but before he completed his haul he was interrupted by the return home of the occupants. Seeing that his only means of retreat was cut off he sought refuge under a divan.

There he remained throughout the day. Hour followed hour until 14 of them had passed by. About that time the young burglar's patience gave out and he decided to make a dash for liberty. His dash ended in the arms of the housekeeper, who had little difficulty holding him until the police arrived.

KILLS CRIPPLED CHILD AND SELF

Father Grieves Over Invalidism of Daughter.

Two Harbors, Minn.—A sorrowing father's grieving over the hopeless invalidism since birth of his seventeen-year-old daughter has ended with his slaying her in mercy and then ending his own life.

The father, John A. Barton, president of the Two Harbors First National bank, this village's wealthiest and most respected citizen, is the mercy slayer, and seventeen-year-old Beatrice Barton, deaf, dumb and like a babe in arms despite her seventeen years of life, his victim.

For years, the surviving family members recall, the father grieved over the condition of his daughter. He lavished every care on her, sought every aid of medicine and science, but her condition was pronounced hopeless. During the past few months his mental attitude entered deeper depths of depression over his daughter's condition. Sunday morning he took her and Isabelle and Audrey, two other daughters, in the family car and started for the Presbyterian church for services.

At the church he told the other two daughters he wished to drive Beatrice around a bit for the air. That was the last they were seen alive. The next day at 5:00 a. m. searchers found the parked car on a lonely side road in the woods a short distance from Two Harbors with the bodies of father and daughter in it.

He had shot Beatrice once through the heart and wounded himself in the arm, then above the heart and the third bullet pierced the heart. The gun clutched in his hand told the story. No other motive than that of a grieving father taking matters in his own hands to end the suffering of his invalid daughter after medicine and science had failed could be advanced.

Three Children Burn to Death in Farm Home

Thompsonville, Mich.—The three small children of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Eddy, residing west of Thompsonville, Benzie county, were burned to death when fire of unknown origin destroyed the Eddy home, from which both of the parents were absent at the time.

The children were Lulu, four; Lenna, three, and Melvin, one.

Mr. Eddy, a shell shocked World war veteran, had been all morning working about the farm out of sight of the house, while Mrs. Eddy had been away for an hour at the home of a neighbor.

The blaze was discovered by two passing traveling men on the Thompsonville-Beulah road.

The three children were completely cremated, only a few scattered bones with small bits of burned flesh attached, were found.

The tragedy was the second of such nature visited upon Mrs. Eddy's family. Two years ago the three children of her uncle, George Peters, residing a mile and a half south of Thompsonville, were burned to death in a fire under similar circumstances.

Prisoner Lost on Way to Jail Shows Up Later

St. Louis, Mo.—Although Sam Morfia has been a resident of St. Louis all his life, he became lost in the crowd at the Union station and missed his train. It isn't unusual for travelers to miss trains but Sammie considered himself well chaperoned for he was a member of a party of federal prisoners being taken to the county jail at Mexico, Mo. The following morning Sam knocked on the front door of the jail and asked admittance as a boarder for six months. He had caught the next train.

Mouse Eats So Much Popcorn, Can't Get Out

Kennewick, Wash.—Illustrating the truth of some old adage, a tiny mouse, after eating to capacity of popcorn in a local electric light and power company office window, ran around the display form for an hour in agony of fright, in full view of amused Saturday night crowds. The mouse had eaten so much popcorn that it was unable to make its exit through the tiny hole which it had entered.

Business Over the Phone

By CORONA REMINGTON

(Copyright.)

"DADDY, if John Harrison asks—asks you for me, what'll you say?"

"What do you want me to say, daughter?"

"Oh, I—I think he's wonderful. I love him most to death, but he doesn't know it."

"Well, I never thought of him as a possible son, so I haven't paid much attention to him. Is he doing well in business? He's with the Sunset City Coal people, I believe."

"Yes, but he wants to get to be vice president of something big. He's worked here nine years but they're awfully stingy with their promotions."

"Maybe it's his fault. I'll investigate and tell you more about it afterward."

A few days later Mr. Wilton had a casual talk with a friend at the club, and the friend was blissfully unconscious of the fact that he was being put through the third degree. So much for Wilton's law training. As strangers are prone to do, he made inquiry about a number of the business houses in town, and among them the Sunset City Coal company. He asked no more questions about it and showed no more interest in it than he did in the others. Nor was the well-dressed young man in the chair opposite him the only one who unknowingly testified for or against John Harrison that day.

As it happened, Mr. Wilton had made his investigations just in time for that very evening Harrison, flushed and stammering, sat on the edge of a chair in the library and tried to state his case.

"I know what you want to say," smiled Wilton kindly, his gray eyes sparkling with amusement. "I had it to do once myself, and I haven't forgotten it yet. Well, to get down to business. You love her, of course; no use asking fool questions. Can you support her?"

"N-not as I would like to. That is, just yet—but I can make her comfortable."

"Hmmm, suppose you give me twenty-four hours to think it over?"

"All right, sir. I don't know how I'll ever live through the suspense, but I guess I'll have to try."

Early the next day Mr. Wilton picked up the telephone and gave a number.

"Is this Mr. Harrison?" he asked.

"Yes."

"John Wilton speaking. Just wanted to say one thing; you seem to be a pretty fine fellow and I admire you, and all that, but you can't marry Myrtle until you get a little further up the business ladder. If you don't deserve a promotion you're not worthy of my daughter. If you do you ought to get it, and you ought to have backbone enough to go after it. I haven't lived here long enough to know the members of your firm, but whoever's over you needs a good stiff talking to. If he's an unprogressive old mossback, get out; but I believe you've got it in you to bring him around. And, remember one thing—no promotion, no wedding. And remember another thing, young man, it's not the money side of it that bothers me. Myrtle'll have $200,000 in her own name when she's of age. It's not that, it's the backbone. Good-by."

Wilton hung up the receiver and things happened pretty swiftly after that. Just before luncheon young Harrison came tearing into Wilton's office like a baby tornado.

"They've promised to make me vice president. May I marry her now?"

"No. Not right now. I advise you to wait a few minutes, anyhow."

"Oh, you know what I mean. May I marry her?"

"Yes, if she's willing."

"The worst is, the very worst is," Harrison went on, "I can't get out to tell Myrtle until this evening. The old man gets furious if I'm five minutes late coming back from lunch. He was never a minute late in his whole life."

"It will keep and you'll enjoy the anticipation."

"Poor consolation, but I've got to put up with it. You won't tell Myrtle, will you?"

"Not I. But why don't you phone her?"

"Phones are such unsatisfactory things."

"Not always. I've found them very useful on some occasions. In fact, even more effective than a personal visit," laughed Wilton. "But tell me how you broke the news."

"I didn't. You did. It's the biggest joke. It was dad you were talking to over the phone this morning and not me!"

"Your father!"

"Sure. He's the whole works up at the Sunset City Coal. Didn't you know it? The phone on my desk is an extension of his, and I listened in to part of the conversation. Don't know what made me do it, but I could hardly sit still when he sauntered into my cubby-hole of an office and magnanimously offered me the position of vice president."

After he had left Wilton lit a cigar, put his feet up on the desk and indulged in a prolonged chuckle.

"I thought that would bring the old chap around," he laughed to himself. "And the boy doesn't suspect a thing. Wonder whether he heard me tell him Myrtle's coming in for $200,000 of her mother's money when she's twenty-one. Hope not, anyhow

Hollanders Frown on Flowers at Funerals

Because $15,000 worth of flowers were spent for a single funeral in Holland, writes the Amsterdam correspondent of the San Francisco Chronicle, Duntch philanthropists have decided to abolish flower gifts for the dead. "To waste hundreds of thousands of dollars a year for ostentatious flower gifts, which often are no expression of mourning, but of snobbery, means an injustice to poor families that might benefit from the money," the committee declares.

"Sweden organized a 'flower fund,' which seems to us a good way out," the Dutch committee explains. "When the Swedes noticed that they spent something like $10,000,000 a year for flower gifts and wreaths, they decided to ask that every one should donate the money he'd spend for flowers to the flower fund. Instead of flowers, this fund would send a little album to the family the flowers were meant for, explaining which sum had been contributed to the fund. The fund goes to a home for aged persons.

"In Switzerland people add to the announcement of a death, 'Please think of——' and then follows the name of some hospital. This means friends are asked to send money to the hospital instead of flowers for the grave."

Viennese Chefs Given Highest European Rank

In the cookery competition among England, India, the United States, France, Germany and Austria at the international exhibition of gastronomic art at Frankfort-on-the-Main the Austrian team, consisting of nine leading cooks, was the winner. The Austrians received six golden crosses of honor and three prizes and diplomas of honor, writes the Vienna correspondent of the London Sunday Observer. The Viennese menu was unanimously declared to be excellent, and a leading German expert said that the Austrian table arrangement was the finest of the exhibition.

The special Viennese dishes were even more successful than the international courses prepared by the Austrians. They were all consumed each day by visitors to the exhibition by 2:00 p. m., though they ought to have lasted until 8:00 p. m. The Viennese feel flattered that the English hotel proprietors have invited them to an exhibition in London.

Cynic Tells Why Girls Yawn on Way to Work

"The latest trick of the smart aleck stenog. and shop girl on the early morning trains," growled the cynic, "is to start yawning in order to convey the impression to the other passengers that they are hard-boiled birds who have been up all night—that being the hallmark of the real thing in New York.

"Those who really have slept all night pull fake yawns easy to spot, but they get away with it and are looked on with envy by those who lead simple lives.

"The great trouble with the yawning fad is that a yawning stenog. starts those opposite her to yawning and the whole carload of passengers gets infected.

"But it's great to see these would-be hot dogs showing off."—New York Sun.

Interesting Old Tome

Yale law school library has recently secured by gift a copy of the first edition of Grotius' "De Jure Belli ac Pacis," published in 1625. This copy of Grotius' epoch-making book on the history of international law is an example of the second or "B" impression of the first edition, in which there are a few typographical changes made by Grotius while the book was in the press. Of the first edition it is believed only three other copies are in the United States, those in Brown university, Harvard and the University of Michigan libraries. The edition of 1646 has been photographically reproduced by the Carnegie Institute of Washington. The copy acquired by Yale is in perfect condition and is considered a fine example of early typographical work.

Longevity Statistics

The average span of life in this country, or the expectation of life at birth, is 55.33 years for males and 57.52 for females. The United States life tables, computed by the bureau of the census, show that of 70,686 persons reaching the age of forty, there will be 52,542 living to the age of sixty; in other words, about 74 per cent of those reaching forty will live to the age of sixty.

Speechmaking

"Have you decided what you will say in your next speech?"

"No," answered Senator Sorghum. "Statesmen now have to work so hard and radio time has become so limited that I don't know whether I'll get a chance to talk."

Pills to Fight Epidemics

Medical officers of India are interested in the inoculation against cholera, typhoid and dysentery by pills instead of by injection. The method, a discovery of Professor Besredka of the Pasteur Institute of Paris, is favored by Dr. N. De Zoysa, chief medical officer of the protective self-vaccination campaign in India, who says that by means of the self-inoculation pills the masses who are not reached by doctors could protect themselves at first signs of an epidemic.

Very Green

The following is stated to be true—but not by us!

The owner of a cattle ranch near Wann, Okla., worried because his pastures were dry and his cattle were not fattening. So he bought 500 pairs of green goggles and fitted them on his cows.

The animals were shipped to market in prime condition, and the rancher insists it was because they ate the shrivelled grass which looked green through the spectacles.—London Tit-Bits.

Lick Observatory

LICK observatory of the University of California was founded by James Lick, who was born in Pennsylvania and died in San Francisco, in 1875, and whose remains are buried in the pier which supports the great equatorial telescope. It is one of the greatest and best-known astronomical observatories in the world.

Just why Mr. Lick left $700,000 for the construction of "a powerful telescope superior and more powerful than any telescope ever yet made," seems never to have been determined.

It occupies a tract of 3,120 acres on Mount Hamilton, 13 miles, as the crow flies, east of the city of San Jose and 4,209 feet above the water in the Pacific ocean, because that location appeared to offer advantages in steadiness of air currents and more clear nights than any other point where a permanent observatory had been established.

The equipment includes a 36-inch equatorial, which increases the size of the celestial body under observation 3,000 times; a 36-inch reflecting and a 6-inch photographic telescope; a 6½-inch comet seeker and numerous auxiliary instruments, including delicate seismographs for recording the duration and direction of earthquakes, as well as a library of some 13,000 books and pamphlets.

The great telescope has been used throughout every good night since first placed in service in 1888. Its contributions in the way of discoveries of hitherto undiscovered celestial bodies and the age, motion and speed of previously discovered stellar bodies have enriched our knowledge of the phenomenon of the heavens away beyond the expectations of those who planned it.

January 2, 1930.

The Holt Weekly News,
Holt, Minnesota,

Dear Editor:

Enclosed you will find a check of $1.50 for which please send the News for another year, as I believe our subscription is due now in January. You can rest assured that we like to hear all the news that you can scratch up in your part of the United States.

Will you kindly, through the News, give to our many friends in Holt and vicinity our best greetings for a happy and properous New Year, and also let them know that we are now enjoying 40 and 50 degree weather with no frost. We had some frosty nights about a month before Christmas and also a little some nights ago. Then we also had a couple days of wet snow about the middle of December, but that didn't even freeze. The only sight we have of snow now is on clear days when we see the all-year-round snow-covered Olympic mountains over 50 miles away. Here the ground is green and fields are growing nicely.

Sincerely, Ernest Raaum.

Farm Relief

Prof. Aslak Ingvald Hjelmeson, our foreign correspondent, writes in and says we should merge all of our railroads into two big systems, and give the republicrats one and the democans the other.

He says this will be the best farm relief possible, because each party will try to outdo the other in trying to get the farmer's vote, consequently freight rates will drop even below the bottom.

We would like to hear what our readers think of this proposition.

Mr. and Mrs. Fred Peterson and Mrs. C. O. Saastad spent Tuesday visiting at Thief River Falls.

Mr. and Mrs. Martin Kulseth of Thief River Falls, Mr. and Mrs. Obert Reierson and children and Rudolph Nyhus were entertained at the W. Rux home Saturday evening.

Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Larson and family, Mr. and Mrs. H. Peterson and family, Mr. and Mrs. Herman Peterson, and Mr. and Mrs. Gust Peterson were entertained at the Tony Peterson home Saturday evening.

SHORT LESSONS IN DAIRYING

LESSON 85

PRODUCTION: It should be understood that feeding dairy cows is a 50-50 proposition. A dairy cow uses half her feed for the maintenance of her body—the other half for milk production; that is, when she is fed a full ration. In other words, a cow requires as much feed to support her body as she does to produce a pound of butterfat a day. If she is given only half a ration, she must use that to live on. A full ration is necessary for the most profitable production.

MANUFACTURING: Before Land O'Lakes Creameries was organized, each of the 600 co-operative creameries in Minnesota followed its own method of making butter. When the co-operative creameries organized Land O' Lakes, they set up a standard for all member creameries to work toward. The first rule in this standard was: "All cream to be graded according to requirements for making Land O'Lakes butter." "All cream to be paid for according to grade."

MARKETING: The price of wheat in Canada, where the wheat growers have a very successful Wheat Pool, is from 15c to 20c higher this fall than in the United States. The Canadian Wheat Pool has information from all over the world on the wheat crop. They believe there is a world shortage and that farmers are entitled to the price they have set. Their Wheat Pool, owned by the producers, has set the price of wheat this fall. In the United States and other countries, where the wheat growers are not organized successfully, the wheat dealers have set the price.

Rev. and Mrs. L. M. Redal and family returned Tuesday from Grand Forks where they visited relatives and friends.

Mr. and Mrs. E. Loven made a trip to Middle River Tuesday evening. Mrs. Loven was on the program for the P. T. A. meeting there.

Miss Hermia Saastad left Saturday to resume her school duties at the Golden Valley School, after spending her Christmas vacation at her home here and with friends and relatives in Thief River Falls.

Mr. and Mrs. Norman Peterson and baby and Mr. and Mrs. Iver Larson and children were entertained at the W. Sorum home New Year's eve.

Mrs. Jessie Sorum and Mrs. Arnold Hagen visited at the H. O. Hanson home Sunday evening

Rev. Myhre of Newfolden was in Thursday on business.

Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Larson and children spent Sunday afternoon at the Iver Larson home.

The Misses Lillette Quist and Ruth Sandum of Thief River Falls spent several days last week visiting with Hermia Saastad at her home here. Miss Quist and Miss Sandum are engaged in teaching in Pennington County.

T. O. Dovre came Monday from Thief River Falls to visit with friends and relatives.

Nils Lysne has been on the sick list the past week.

P. Hanson took his little son, Pierce, to Warren Wednesday, to consult a physician.

Buckleys Leave

W. C. Buckley, who has been transferred to Kennedy, to serve as station agent for the G. N. Ry. there, left with his family on Wednesday, by car.

He had his household goods shipped the forepart of the week.

Their many friends regret to see them go, and wish them success in their new home.

School Notes

School re-opened on Monday. We are all glad to be back to work after our Christmas vacation. The teachers returned to school all ready to work and start the new year right.

The reporters for the School Notes have changed since Christmas. They are:

Oscar Fosholm, 1st and 2d grades
Johnny Doran, 3d and 4th grades
Walter Steinhauer, 5th and 6th grades
Milla Gavere, 7th and 8th grades
Olive Engebrigtsen, High School

The American Literature class have been writing one-act plays. The class was divided into three groups, each group writing a play. One person from each group has been chosen to coach the play for his group. The characters for the plays are chosen from the High School, who will present it to the rest of the High School in the next few weeks.

The General Science class is studying a very warm subject. They are discussing the advantages and disadvantages of the three types of heating systems. They feel that this subject is the most interesting at this time of the year.

We have lost two pupils since Christmas—Mavis and Basil Brewer quit school because they have moved from Holt. Mavis was in second grade and Basil in seventh. We also have a new pupil. Mary Margaret Olson began here after Christmas. She is in eighth grade. We were very sorry to lose Mavis and Basil and very glad to see Mary Margaret start school here.

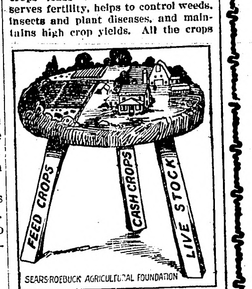
One-Legged Farming System Won't Stand Up

Thousands of farmers who are now depending upon cash crops could double their income by combining the production of cash crops and feed crops with well-managed live stock, states the Sears-Roebuck Agricultural Foundation. Trying to succeed at farming with one crop or product is about as difficult as making a table stand with only one leg.

Growing a variety of feed and cash crops leads to rotation which preserves fertility, helps to control weeds, insects and plant diseases, and maintains high crop yields. All the crops produced are not likely to fail or to be lower in price at once. Diversification permits more effective use of man and horse labor and machinery.



Farmers who rely on live stock are more likely to have a proper proportion of their acreage in legumes than those who depend solely on crops for their income, the Foundation adds. Live stock helps to preserve the fertility of the soil, saves labor by harvesting some crops without cost, utilizes waste land and waste crop products, provides more of the family living and gives the farmer profitable occupation during the winter, turning the farm into a factory operating the year round.

Face Dangers for Sake of Science

Returning Scientist Tells of Life on Hottentot Reservation.

Washington.—For three years home was a corrugated iron house on top of a sun-blistered, solitary mountain in an arid country for W. A. Hoover and Mrs. Hoover, their four-year-old daughter and Fred A. Greely, a fellow scientist, who have just returned to Washington from South West Africa.

Killing a charging leopard with a 22-caliber rifle, says Mr. Hoover, was the most exciting adventure of their lonely post. The ringhals cobra incident was a close second. The cobra spit poison in Mr. Hoover's face.

Mr. Hoover was field leader of the National Geographic society expedition in co-operation with the Smithsonian institution to establish a solar radiation observatory on top of Mt. Brukkaros, a dead volcano of South West Africa.

Betty, Mr. and Mrs. Hoover's daughter, was one and one-half years old when they went out to establish the observatory. Now she is four. A flock of chickens and a cow were her only playmates for three years.

The Hoovers and Mr. Greely were relieved by Louis O. Sordahl and Mrs. Sordahl and A. G. Froiland, who arrived at Mt. Brukkaros to carry on the work of "shooting the sun" six times a day.

Reports From Three Continents.

The work of the expedition was to set up an observatory which would make reports similar to those made by Smithsonian institution solar observatories in Chile and at Table mountain, California. The three observatories on three continents are reporting daily variations in the heat of the sun that reaches the earth. Every activity on the face of the earth is dependent on the sun's radiation, the variation of which is the subject of this study.

While individuals are only conscious of such variation in radiation as earth itself brings about through the procession of the seasons, evidence of the variation in the strength of the sun itself is not far to seek. Smithsonian authorities think there is a definite connection between variation and solar radiation and changes of weather. The observatory Mr. Hoover established on Mt. Brukkaros, South West Africa, may some day help warn Chicago of a coming drop in temperature.

At Brukkaros the Hoover party lived 2,000 feet up a mountainside and 61 miles from a grocery store. The nearest white man, a German missionary, lived eight miles away. Their nearest neighbors were Hottentots, whose beehive houses dotted the plain. Because the observatory stands within a Hottentot reservation Mr. Hoover had to get permission to hunt springbok from the local chief of the Hottentots, who is known as Captain.

Isolated on a dry mountain, surrounded by African natives, the expedition was nevertheless in constant touch with civilization. The government of South West Africa, which built the three-room corrugated iron home on the rocky mountain top, ran a telephone line connecting with Keetmanshoop, the nearest town. A radio, a Christmas gift from the National Geographic society, brought them cable news of the United States and the rest of the world via the station at Capetown, although static interfered in warm weather.

"A man setting up a solar radiation observatory has to be a jack-of-all trades," says Mr. Hoover. "Greely and I were carpenters, plumbers, mechanics, electricians, and farmers alternately.

"One night we heard noises that sounded like a lion," he said, telling about the leopard, "and next morning three of our chickens were missing. Then we suspected our visitor to have been a leopard, and the following night set a big trap. The leopard got into the trap, but went off with it and all.

Greely's Lucky Shot.

"Next morning we trailed him, and finally located him in a crevice. I fired, wounding the leopard, which at once leaped toward us. We were on a ledge. The animal just barely missed the ledge and, as it tumbled down, Greely fired and killed it."

The ringhals cobra, a snake that grows to six feet in length, was a frequent visitor at the Mt. Brukkaros observatory. More than half a dozen were killed near the house. Snake-bite serum is kept in the ice box at all times. Once a cobra coiled itself on the front porch. Another time, as Mr. Hoover entered the storehouse, he felt moisture on his cheek and looked up to see a ringhals cobra lying above the door. The snake had spit at him. He got his gun and killed it.

The ringhals cobra shoots its venom as well as injecting it with the fangs. The poison shot through the air is not dangerous to humans unless it gets into the eyes.

The expedition kept an auto truck in a "garage" half way up the mountain. Every ten days some one would drive to Keetmanshoop for supplies and mail. On these trips the driver always took a "black boy" to walk back in case of accident. The Hottentots have no use for work, but they do not consider walking work. Fifty miles in a day they consider a nice jaunt. Hence the emergency "black boy" on the truck.

Retire Hen on Pension After 17 Years' Service

Clyde, N. Y.—In her old age and infirmity, a hen which laid a goodly supply of eggs regularly for Henry Lauster for nearly 17 years has been "retired."

The hen is blind now. Lauster refused to kill her when she stopped laying, rewarding her faithfulness with an extra large daily ration of corn, instead.

Lauster, a retired butcher, bought the hen in 1912.

Healthiest Boy and Girl in U. S.

Florence Smock of Lake county, Florida, and Harold Deatline of Morgan county, Indiana, each seventeen years old, who were proclaimed health champions of the United States as 1,500 members of the National 4-H club congress met at the Sherman hotel, Chicago.

"BUREAU OF DEAD MEN'S SHOES" HOLDS ODD RELICS

Storage Place for Effects of Dead Soldiers and Sailors Whose Heirs Are Unknown.

Washington.—Without a doubt one of the most interesting government offices in Washington to some people, if they knew about it, would be what the experts call the "personal effects room."

More popularly known as the "bureau of dead men's shoes," it is indeed such a bureau, for here are stored the strictly personal properties of persons under government protection who have died without leaving legal heirs or whose heirs cannot be found. In most cases they were American soldiers and sailors who died in foreign lands or on the high seas. But the collection also includes the property of soldiers who died in soldiers' homes, and of German spies and others.

This "bureau," the work of which consists of examining, marking, labeling, cataloging, and filling the objects received, is housed in the old pension building. At the present time more than a dozen steel cases are used for the filing, and they are crammed to the limit with sealed packages. Once the filing is complete, the "bureau" begins its efforts to find the heirs. In every case everything possible is done to find some relative—a parent, brother, sister, wife, or child.

A single glance into any of the many packages proves how great their value would be to loved ones, if they could only be reached. But intrinsically they have small value. Yet the world's greatest government spends its time and energies collecting, labeling, and distributing these "priceless" treasures to their rightful owners. Government employees comb the whole globe in their efforts to find the heirs, no matter how trivial the value of the property in question.

Whether it is a faded love letter, a lock of hair, a picture, or what not, Uncle Sam makes the same efforts in every case to search out the heirs. Our consuls in foreign countries who are under the State department handle the affairs and personal effects of those persons who die abroad. If the heirs cannot be found the property is sent to the "bureau of dead men's shoes" and stored while further effort is made to find them.

Nearly all of the packages in the "bureau" contain rings and watches and medals. There are also many other relics, such as lockets, photographs, locks of hair; letters from sweethearts, etc. And many of those whose effects go to the bureau leave real estate, bank notes, bonds, etc. But these are always converted into dollars and deposited in the treasury in the name of the legal heir or heirs.

Romer is said to have made the first determination of the velocity of light in 1676.

Fellowes hadn't devised a solution of Jeff's problem by the time the coach dropped them at the ferry-landing. It was a sorry fix for the country to be in, only half-interested in the struggle, and that half, as he knew, mainly concentrated in the southern and frontier states, which had no conception of the government's need of a navy, and were inclined to be jealous of the wealth shipping had brought to the seaboard cities of the north. But perhaps, if men like himself, who had either a sense of conviction or of wrong, fought desperately, determinedly, for long enough, the sullen apathy of the shipping interests could be neutralized, and the southerners and backwoodsmen might learn the potentialities the sea held for America. They'd all come to hate the same object. Hate sufficiently, and you could conquer anyone, any difficulty. A lesson he'd learned by bitter experience, and must teach others.

He landed at the foot of Whitehall street as grim of countenance as though he went to meet Collishawe. Tom and Cuffee trod close at his heels, bewildered by the throngs of people and the racket of voices and cartwheels grinding on the cobbles.

In front of the Washington hotel, at the corner of Broad and Pearl streets, Fellowes halted his charges

"I am going on to see Mr. Joshua Inglepin," he said. "Do you two await me in the taproom here. And Cuffee, see to it that Tom doesn't get drunk."

"Yah, Mars'r Fellowe'."

"Relyin' on a ign'rant nigger," fumed Tom. "'Tain't fair, messmate. How'd ye know I was squarin' my sails to git three sheets in the wind?"

Fellowes turned into Pearl street, crossed Hanover square and so came to Front street, which he traversed as far as a large, double, brick warehouse. Once upon a time, its facade had been pierced by a double door, exactly in the center, but this had been bricked up, so many years ago that the new bricks had faded almost to the hue of the surrounding wall. In place of the large door, two single ones had been pierced under either gable. Over the nearer one hung the sign:

BENJAMIN INGLEPIN, Exporter and Importer; Sailings to all Ports.

Over the farther sign read:

JOSHUA INGLEPIN, Exporter and Importer; Sailings to the Baltic, the British Isles, Southern Europe and the Indies.

Fellowes entered the farther door. A gray-haired clerk slid off a high stool, and advanced to meet him, timorously.

"I am looking for Mr. Inglepin," said Fellowes.

"Mr. Inglepin is out, sir. At the Tontine."

"When will he return?"

"Ah, sir, not until after three, when the board suspends. But if you went around to Wall street now you might find him at leisure. 'Tis the hour of 'high 'Change,' sir, and all the gentlemen should be taking their nooning."

Fellowes thanked the old man, and went out into Front street, turning the corner into Wall, where the Tontine Coffee house rose above the curbing this side of Water. Threading the groups, still arguing and discussing the trading projects of the morning, he had as little difficulty identifying Joshua Inglepin as the Inglepin warehouse the hostile brothers had divided in half when they broke up their partnership.

Joshua's stout body was clad as neatly as Benjamin's, but after the Democratic fashion; his long-tailed blue coat was short-waisted, and his nether garments were skin-tight, gray pantaloons, terminating in polished half-boots. His gray hair was cut short, and brushed straight back, and his ruddy face was set off by a plain stock and neckerchief. Where Benjamin was sedate, quiet, circuitous, with an elusive eye, Joshua was positive, outspoken, forthright.

Fellowes tapped him on the arm.

"I beg your pardon," said the Long Islander. "My name is Lion Fellowes, Mr. Inglepin. I was pressed off your brother's ship True Bounty."

Joshua swung around with amazing quickness in a man of his size. There was a look almost of sly consideration in the china-blue eyes that stabbed questioningly into Fellowes'.

"Ah, yes," he answered. "Heard of you, Captain Fellowes. Heard of the incident you mention, of course. That d—d cur, Chater—ah, ahem, humph! But why d' you come to me? You must know my brother and I—"

"I have information in that connection which I think will interest you," Fellowes interrupted quietly.

Inglepin drew a step nearer. There was no suggestion of slyness in his face, now. His expression was eager, curiously avaricious. His blue eyes were cold as Fellowes' own.

"This d—d license business, eh?"

"That—and more."

Inglepin hesitated, then asked abruptly:

"Treason, eh?"

"I believe so, sir."

"Knew it, by G—d!" Joshua slapped his hip delightedly. "Knew the d—d fool couldn't play with fire, and not burn his fingers. Knew it soon as I heard he was keepin' on the True Bounty's crew. But you, sir, how'd you—"

"I can't tell you here, Mr. Inglepin. Will it suffice if I say I escaped several days ago from the Badger sloop-of-war? And have just surprised your brother and his daughter, with Chater, entertaining Captain Collishawe at Chater's farm on Long Island?"

Joshua Inglepin slipped his arm through Fellowes', and the light in his eyes danced and flickered as if a wind was blowing it.

"Come with me," he said. "My office will do. Glad you dropped in, Captain Fellowes. Believe you and I can do some business. Eh? Treason! But I expected it, I expected it. Ben always would over-reach himself. Ha, ha! The d—n fool!"

persuaded 'tis that document your brother had been concocting these past months."

"He's been hand-in-glove with every runagate Federalist in the North," admitted Joshua.

"Exactly, sir. And my guess is that before going further with it they awaited some answer from the Canadian authorities. If I'm right 'twas that answer Collishawe delivered at Babylon."

"And why wouldn't they have turned over the petition, or whatever the thingummy was, to him?"

"'Tis likelier they'd choose to convey it themselves since most delicate negotiations would flow from it. I feel this the more strongly, sir, after hearing the True Bounty is held ready for sailing."

"Sounds reasonable," growled Joshua. "So our job is to find this abominable scrawl?"

"We should have your brother's house and office searched tonight," Fellowes returned promptly.

"You'll find no papers in Ben's house or office, Captain Fellowes, you nor anyone. I knew the scoundrel, and knowing him I refuse to underestimate him. Aboard ship, maybe. Yes, but not until after she's sailed."

"Wait for his sailing, then, and pursue," exclaimed Fellowes.

"Take him red-handed, eh? That would be best. You may depend upon it, he and Chater are taking extraordinary precautions in whatever they are up to. As for the girl—Humph! If my eyes tell me anything, she has more sense than her father."

"She is unusually intelligent," Fellowes agreed heavily. "I'd prefer not to speak of her."

"Humph! Ha! Quite so! But if I'm to play with you, captain, I want all the cards on the table—face up."

"I have no intention that it should be otherwise, sir."

Restless Eyes

According to a Russian scientist, there is a certain rhythm to the movements of the human eye as well as to those of the heart. It roves back and forth at the rate of about 100 movements a minute.

Under normal conditions—that is, in quiet, familiar surroundings—the eyes remain at rest for a few seconds. But soon they resume their usual movements, sometimes from one side to another, sometimes up and down. It is believed by evolutionists that this characteristic restlessness of the eye is a throwback to primitive times when man's ancestors had to be constantly on the watch for danger.—Washington Star.

For a Pie

Buddy, not quite three, is exceedingly fond of pie. One day his mother remarked that she just didn't know what to have for dinner.

"I know," said Buddy, "have pie."

"Well, I don't believe I have anything to make pie with," answered mother.

"Oh, yes, mother, you have a receipt," was the response.

Ease in 5 Minutes—Comfort in 5 Hours

Don't let SORE THROAT get the best of you . . .

FIVE minutes after you rub on Musterole your throat should begin to feel less sore! Continue the treatment once every hour for five hours and you'll be astonished at the relief.

Working like the trained hands of a masseur, this famous blend of oil of mustard, camphor, menthol and other ingredients brings relief naturally. It penetrates and stimulates blood circulation and helps to draw out infection and pain. Used by millions for 20 years. Recommended by doctors and nurses.

Keep Musterole handy—jars and tubes.

To Mothers—Musterole is also made in milder form for babies and small children. Ask for Children's Musterole.

This Family Prolific

Only thirty-seven years old, the wife of a laborer at Ueberlosheim, Germany, has just given birth to her eighteenth child. The mother herself is the eighteenth child of her parents, and her seventeen brothers and sisters boast of ninety-seven children. Her parents are still living and recently celebrated their golden wedding surrounded by one hundred eighteen children and grandchildren.

And That Was That

"I don't carry an umbrella over you any more awkwardly than I did before we were married, and you never bawled me out in those days," he growled.

"No," she snapped, "but I had to bite my tongue to keep from it."

When Food Sours

Lots of folks who think they have "indigestion" have only an acid condition which could be corrected in five or ten minutes. An effective anti-acid like Phillips Milk of Magnesia soon restores digestion to normal.

Phillips does away with all that sourness and gas right after meals. It prevents the distress so apt to occur two hours after eating. What a pleasant preparation to take! And how good it is for the system! Unlike a burning dose of soda—which is but temporary relief at best—Phillips Milk of Magnesia neutralizes many times its volume in acid.

Next time a hearty meal, or too rich a diet has brought on the least discomfort, try—

Fire Fighting Up to Date

Fire brigades are experimenting with a new kind of fire extinguisher in the form of high pressure cylinders containing carbon dioxide. When the carbon dioxide is released it pours out a cloud of white flakes like snow which reduces the temperature of the air as it melts and absorbs the oxygen from the air, thus smothering the fire. It is expected that this method of fire fighting will be very valuable in combating oil, paint, and chemical fires where water is of little use.

Married Woman's Name

Actually there is no federal nor, so far as we can ascertain, state law which arbitrarily compels a woman to bear her husband's surname unless she wishes to do so. Recently the United States controller issued an order that married women in the government employ should sign their husband's surname when signing the pay roll.—Washington Star.

HOARD OF ROMAN COINS DISCOVERED

Miniatures Dug Up in Mosaic Floor in England.

London.—A hoard of 1,240 coins has been discovered among some interesting Roman relics in Lydney Park, Gloucestershire, the country estate of Lord Bledisloe.

The site is at present closed to the public, but Lord Bledisloe has offered to throw open the ancient Roman site as a gift to the nation, providing it is preserved and its ancient beauties utilized to the best advantage.

The coins just unearthed belong to the dark period which immediately followed the departure of the Romans from this island. There is little doubt they belong to the time of King Arthur and his knights.

They are miniatures of old Roman coins. On each is a rough design, but none is larger than a Maundy penny, smaller than the American copper. Mingled with the coins are a few clippings of the late Fourth century Roman coins.

The filings disclose that the Roman coins had become too valuable to circulate intact. The minute size of the ancient British coins indicates a great scarcity of metal in the period.

The coins were discovered among the ruins of Roman baths. They were embedded in the broken debris of a mosaic floor in the "frigidarium" or cool room of what would now be called a Turkish bath.

The excavations at Lydney Park supply the epitome of 600 remote years of British history. The site is a narrow promontory. There are early British fortifications, dating from 100 B. C.; iron mines used by the Romans until the end of the Third century; a large Roman house built around a courtyard, with intricate mosaic pavements of red, blue and white marble, and an elaborate set of Roman baths.

Close by is a remarkable temple dedicated to a Roman-British deity, Nodens, who may have been a god of the forest, or a personification of the River Severn which flows nearby, or, like the Celtic Nudd, a god of the fairies or goblins.

Nothing is known about his cult, but the temple is the earliest example in the history of religious architecture in Europe in which the systematic use of side chapels is found. They were apparently used as shrines for subsidiary deities after the manner Christian chapels are dedicated to saints.

No Barber or Movie in Nebraska County

Harrisburg, Neb.—Lacking barber shop, pool hall, moving picture theater or railroad, and with but one town, one newspaper, one bank, Banner county ranks fourth among the counties of Nebraska in production of winter wheat, and but little below that in raising of all wheat.

The county is also a heavy producer of oats, barley, cattle and hogs, all of which must be hauled to points outside the county for rail shipment.

The county population was estimated in 1925 as about 1,500.

The county has no incorporated town, the county seat, Harrisburg, never having been incorporated.

In Harrisburg is a county high school, the plant of which includes a school building, dormitory, gymnasium and teacherage, all located on the same tract of ground.

The value of the school plant is about $30,000. It was constructed on a "pay as you go" basis, without even the submission of a bond issue proposal to voters. The gymnasium is the newest building, 50 feet by 100 feet.

Here there is also the Banner County bank, the only one in the county, an institution considered among the strongest in western Nebraska.

The Knights of Pythias lodge hall here surprises strangers who often wonder how a lodge in a town of this size can have as many members.

A church here is now planning for a new structure.

Court Orders Deductions From Alimony Payments

El Paso, Texas.—Rebates come in handy any time but a rebate on alimony is particularly gratifying. Manuel Chavira told Judge Caldwell he saw his estranged wife in company with another man. The judge ordered a rebate of $2. Later Caldwell saw his wife with two other men. Judge Caldwell promptly ordered $4 deducted from his regular monthly alimony payment.

Wants to Go to Jail; Judge Turns Him Free

Buffalo.—A "tough break" is the way Roger McGuire, seventy-eight, no home, described it.

Brought into court as a vagrant, McGuire pleaded to be sent away for 30 days as a birthday present, having advised the court he had just attained that ripe age.

City Judge Weiss pondered, reflected and gazed out of the window.

"I am very sorry," he said after much deliberation, "the penitentiary is too crowded now. I cannot grant your request."

McGuire was given a hot meal and then told to be "on his way."

GIRL TEACHES HOW TO BUST BRONCHOS

Golden-Haired Maid Puts Dudes Through Paces.

Denton, Texas.—Miss Blanche Williams is a college graduate, an artist, and, when she has time for such activities, a society girl. She is a graceful blonde of the type that looks well on the dance floor or in the drawing room. Certainly she doesn't look like a broncho buster. Yet a broncho buster she is, and she operates a "cowboy school."

In a cow lot of the Williams ranch, ten miles north of Denton, Texas, this golden-haired girl may be found almost any day putting "tenderfoot" pupils through the arduous paces of riding mustangs with spurs and "bull-dogging" steers. And that isn't all she teaches. Lariat throwing, calf riding (which corresponds to steer riding of adult cowpunchers) hog tying and all the other tricks are in the curriculum.

It's a Hobby.

One of the most extraordinary features of this cowboy school is that the student can get his training for virtually nothing. Miss Williams teaches broncho busting and its allied arts for the joy of it. It's a hobby. The attractive teacher says she gets "a barrel of fun out of it."

When Miss Williams, as a child, developed what might be called a tomboy complex, her parents regarded it as perfectly natural. Instead of trying to curb it, her mother took it as a matter of course. Her father gave her the choice of his stables, and she and her pony became familiar figures on the streets of Denton. Her early life was a strangely mingled atmosphere of refinement and violence.

There are four of the Williams children—two boys and two girls. The father, a successful merchant and large land owner, gave them the best of educational advantages. The boys, upon completion of their schooling, took jobs in the store and are launched upon business careers. The girls, Blanche and her younger sister, Julia, made excellent records in college, specializing in art. Blanche also studied voice and made such progress that it was generally expected she would open a studio or go on the stage. But that she hasn't done yet. The lure of ranch life has been too strong. When she finished college she returned to the cowboy school she had started while a student in high school.

Gives Riding Lessons at 15.

She was scarcely more than fifteen when she began giving riding lessons. Her friends appealed to her to teach them how to be horsewomen. Thereupon was founded in the high-fenced corral of the Williams ranch the riding school.

Society folk who hoped that out of the girl's plan might evolve a select "riding academy" got a shock when the class met for the first time. The arena was the cow lot on the Williams ranch. There was no gallery to speak of, and those who came to watch the proceedings got no seats except those on top of the high board fence. Blanche opened festivities by mounting the wildest pony on the ranch and riding him through a spectacular series of lunges, leaps and sideslips. It made a good show and filled the youngsters with envy and determination.

Believe Real El Greco Canvas Found on Coast

San Francisco.—What is believed to be an authentic El Greco painting, valued at between $50,000 and $75,000, has been discovered here.

The discovery was made by George Barron, curator of the Golden Gate Park museum, when the painting was brought to him by Clark Johnson, who had purchased it at a second-hand store for $7.50.

On first appearance the painting appeared to be a poor attempt at depicting a Persian rajah. Barron put the painting through a process that removes one coat of paint without harming an older one underneath.

When the process was completed the Persian rajah had disappeared and instead was a painting of St. Francis of Assissi in an attitude of prayer.

Prof. Lorenzo Capatini, art critic for the Vatican, here to paint California missions, inspected the painting and said he was convinced of its authenticity.

Many Male M. P's Seem Reticent About Age

London.—Reticence regarding age is a characteristic and privilege usually attributed to women, but not so in the British house of parliament. There are 102 male members of the new house of commons who have not, so far, confided their ages to Dod's Parliamentary Companion, an official handbook. Seventy-nine of them are Labor members, sixteen are Conservatives, six are Liberals, and one is an Independent.

Of the fourteen women members, nine claim the privilege and do not state their ages. Their reticence calls for no remark. The fact, however, that five boldly reveal the year of their birth gives point to the question: "Why should men be so shy?"

Pony Is Nursemaid

London.—A pony kept by J. Butler, of Chippenham, acts as nursemaid to children, pushing them around in perambulators by taking the handle of the vehicle in its mouth and shoving.

GUILLOTINE NOW IS IDLE IN PARIS

Murderers Shown Great Leniency in France.

Paris.—The guillotine is becoming a relic of the past as murderers are granted more leniency in France today than ever before in history.

Within four days, three self-confessed parricides and one sweetheart killer were acquitted. The executioner has not been called upon to work in Paris for nearly three years while in the provinces the guillotine has not fallen in months and only a few times in the last several years.

Sentences of death imposed on five women during the year for the most horrible murders, including the poisoning of babies and husbands, were commuted to life imprisonment by the president of the republic. Ten assassins have just been excused from going to Devil's Island because of delicate health.

Mme. Jane Weiller, who shot and killed her husband after an all night party in the cabarets of Montmartre and Montparnasse, was recently sentenced to five years' imprisonment; but some legal experts declared she would have been acquitted had she followed a different sort of defense. She claimed that she shot to save herself and child. They said it would have been better had she merely argued, "I loved him; that's why I killed him."

French juries are often sentimental. Although they see little sentiment in trying to save one's own life, they are apt to be moved to tearful generosity if a murderer swears he killed in the name of love because of passion.

The Assize court of the Var acquitted young Richard Corbett when he declared he loved his mother so that he could not bear to see her suffering from cancer. He shot a bullet in her temple. The jury understood and freed him of all blame.

Romance of War Flares Afresh After Long Wait

London.—A romance which flamed during the war and which died out because of uncontrollable circumstances flared up afresh as the result of a dramatic and unexpected reunion between a London girl and a New Zealander who traveled half way around the world to take part in the recent armistice day ceremonies here.

The former soldier, Victor Beetham, who lost a leg in the war, and Mrs. Miriam Smith, who served in the conflict as a nurse, decided at last to get married and to return to far off New Zealand to live.

The pair became engaged to be married when they first met each other a decade ago. But the fact that the nurse had a widowed mother whom she refused to leave, forced Beetham to return home alone. They corresponded for a few months and then Beetham received a letter from Miss McNaughton saying she was going to be married. Beetham said:

"This year I decided to come to London to lay a wreath at the Cenotaph. Mrs. Smith, whose husband meanwhile had died, also came there to lay a wreath in memory of her father. By strange chance we came there at the same time. Our meeting was a great surprise to both of us. We regarded it as fate and decided to get married."

French Open Campaign to Bar Widow's Weeds

Paris.—Because Paris was recently dubbed the city of gloom, from the fondness of its women for wearing black, a first step is being made to abolish the widow's veil.

Widows themselves are back of the movement. They claim the widow's weeds in France are far too long and lugubrious and are not at all in keeping with the French reputation for chicness. Now Duchess d'Uzes, president of the Society for Women's Suffrage, who is herself a widow, has declared her earnest support for the campaign.

The duchess was widowed 50 years ago, but she has always worn widow's crepe, although she now freely admits the style is entirely out of keeping with modern life. She bases her argument more on utility than appearance, claiming that in the crowded streets, in the autobuses and subways the long veil is a nuisance.

Twins Fill School

Richmond, Va.—The schools in Winston-Salem, N. C., have 35 pairs of twins on the class rolls, according to a survey just completed.

Seagoing Steer Too Much for Cowboys

New York.—When a steer escaped from the stock yards recently and plunged off the dock into North river, New York's cowboys washed their hands of the affair. They vainly tried to lasso the steer from the dock.

Some one suggested the police. An emergency squad, with a truck crane, a small boat and several yards of rope, had the steer tied up and hauled back on the dock in no time at all.

"The steer took unfair advantage of us," the cowboys explained. "Who ever heard of a seagoing cowboy?"

Common Artistic Error in Depicting New Moon

Artists accustomed to inserting a new moon in a picture in the most artistic position often transgress the laws of nature, as the horns of the crescent moon must always point in a definite direction, depending primarily on the latitude of the observer.

In the north temperate zone the new moon as seen just after sunset always points upward and to the left. In this latitude the sun circles to the south and, as it approaches the western horizon descends obliquely from left to right. The new moon, following the sun, takes approximately the same course, and since the horns always point away from the sun, they turn upward and to the left.

In the southern part of the earth the reverse is true, while in the tropics the horns point almost directly upward. The position of the old moon as it rises in the morning is the reverse of that of the new moon as viewed from the same latitude.—Popular Mechanics Magazine.

Tit for Tat

Senator Tydings of Maryland was talking about the revolt in Afghanistan.

"King Amanullah," he said, "came and told Europe how backward his Afghan subjects were, and then he went home and tried to modernize them, and they turned and kicked him out for an iconoclast.

"Tit for tat, eh? Like the two strangers.

"Two strangers got into talk in Central park. After a while one of them said:

"'Well, I'll be leaving you. Here comes my wife with some old hag she's picked up.'

"'That's strange,' said the second, 'here comes mine with another.'"

And the Engineer Said?

Six truckloads of garbage were halted at the city incinerator at Sacramento, Calif., and the contents spread upon the floor, while workers searched among potato peelings and whatnot for a wrist watch that a housewife frantically informed them she had lost in the family garbage can. After an hour of vain searching, the city engineer telephoned the woman about the failure of his force to find the watch. "Never mind," she said, "I found it on the window sill."

America's Lead in Doctors

With the exception of the United States, which has one practitioner to every 753 people, Great Britain has a higher number of doctors proportionately than any other country in the world. There is now more than one doctor to each 1,000 of the population.

Architectural Advance

A pendative in architecture is a structure in masonry designed to support a domical vault over four or more isolated piers. Its development by Byzantine architects of the Sixth century made it possible to erect domes above interiors of any desired plan, and was one of the greatest acquisitions in the history of architecture.

Needless Pain!

Some folks take pain for granted.

They let a cold "run its course."

They wait for their headaches to "wear off."

If suffering from neuralgia or from neuritis, they rely on feeling better in the morning.

Meantime, they suffer unnecessary pain. Unnecessary, because there is an antidote. Bayer Aspirin always offers immediate relief from various aches and pains we once had to endure. If pain persists, consult your doctor as to its cause.

County Commissioners Held Annual Meeting Last Week

Andrew Lodoen, of Warren, representing the first district of the Marshall county board of commissioners, was elected chairman of the county governing body for 1930 at the annual meeting which was in session at the county seat last week. Ole Bergman, of Alvarado, representing the second district was elected vice-chairman.

Mr. Lodoen is succeeding Ole Torgerson, Stephen, of the third district, as chairman of the board of commissioners.

Selection of juries for the spring term of court together with the approval of bills took up the time of the commissioners at the meeting. The reports from the county attorney and highway engineer were also read at the annual meeting.

The Warren Sheaf was awarded the county printing for Marshall county for the year 1930.

The financial statement, delinquent tax list and the proceedings of the annual and semi-annual meetings of the board will also be published in the other papers of the county as follows: Marshall County Banner, Argyle; Stephen Messenger; Red River Valley Times, Oslo; Strandquist Press; Newfolden Review; Holt Weekly News; Middle River Record; Grygla Eagle.

With such good arrangements as that, the county news will reach every taxpayer in the entire county.

1929 Tax Rates Show But Little Change Over Previous Year

Little change was made in the average tax rate for Marshall county in 1929 over a year ago, says the Warren Sheaf, taxpayers being required to pay on an average of 62.2 mills this year in comparison to an average of 62.7 mills a year ago.

Average tax rates in school districts, townships and villages and the county government, all showed slight decreases, but the slight increase in the state rate was enough to off-set the local rate reductions to make the general rate approximately the same a comparison of figures shows.

Tax rates are reduced in 31 townships and five villages in the county for 1930, while 16 townships and 6 villages will show increases in rates.

In only three villages of Marshall county will the total rate show a reduction over a year ago, these reductions being very slight in each instance, ranging from a .1 mill reduction in Stephen to .9 mill reduction in Oslo. The total Stephen rate is reduced from 131.8 mills in 1928 to 131.7 mills in 1929, and the Oslo rate is reduced from 98.8 mills in 1928 to 97.7 mills in 1929. Newfolden's total rate was lowered .2 mill from 101.4 mills in 1928 to 101.2 mills in 1929. An increase of 42.5 mills was made in the total rate for the village of Holt, increasing from 141.3 a year ago to 183.8 mills in 1929.

LESSON 86

PRODUCTION: Cows that are dry and not with calf require, according to Prof. Haecker, around half the amount of feed that dairy cows of the same weight require when they are producing 25 lbs of 4 p ct. milk a day, or a pound of butterfat. Cows should be fed according to what they are capable of producing over and above what they require for their bodies.

MANUFACTURING: The second rule set up by Land O' Lakes Creameries for making high quality butter was, "All cream to be delivered on regular days--Monday, Wednesday, Friday, and Saturday, and within regular hours (forenoon) and as early in the day as possible. Deliveries to be made four times a week in summer and three in winter."

MARKETING: The Canada Wheat Pool is equally strong in all three of the Canadian wheat growing provinces --Manitoba, Saskatchewan, and Alberta. It has a membership of over half the wheat growers. By virtue of this, it is able to set a higher price for wheat in Canada than is paid to the wheat growers in any other country. Land O' Lakes Creameries is working to have a membership of over half the co-operative creameries in the butter producing states. Canada affords a splendid example of what farmers can accomplish when they are united.

School Notes

High School

The English III class has completed the study of American Literature. The 2nd semester they will begin studying debating, public speaking, and classics.

The Chemistry Class made ice-cream Monday. The Sophomores and Freshmen were "deliciously" surprised when they were served ice-cream and wafers by the fair maidens of the Junior class.

The English II class are studying Poe's Prose Tales. His mystery stories prove very fascinating.

The Geometry Class will begin studying circles on Monday. They have completed the work of triangles and parallel lines.

The 3rd six weeks exams will be given Thursday and Friday, which will cover the work we have had during the first semester.

The High School is grateful to Montgomery Ward & Co. for the radio which is theirs to enjoy a few days.

We are sorry Gladys Anderson is ill. We hope her condition is not serious and that she will soon return to her school duties.

Seventh and Eighth Grades

The seventh and eighth grades have been having their midyear examinations this week. Here's hoping that Mr. Overum hasn't been too hard on them.

Myron Gunheim and Mary Margaret Olson have been on the sick list. We are sorry that they are not with us, but hope that they will soon return.

Fifth and Sixth Grades

The fifth and sixth grades have turned to carpenters and are making various things. The girls are making bread boards; the boys, carts and sleds.

A Good Citizens League has been organized in the Hygiene Class. This is for the purpose of keeping the desks clean and sanitary.

Third and Fourth Grades

The children have decorated their table to represent the different living things in Eskimo land.

The Little Citizens League met to elect officers. The officers are: Eunice Johnson, president; Clara Hoffman, vice-pres.; and Myrtle Halvorson, secretary.

A time chart is being made to record the time the children go to bed and the time they get up in the morning.

First and Second Grades

In correlation with their language work the first grade have put some snakes and bears in the sand for the winter, to represent the animals that sleep during the winter months.

The second grade pupils have been discussing the progress of the heating of homes from the very earliest stage to the present day. To finish their project they are now making a movie of it.

Together the first and second graders have made booklets in which to keep their work for the year.

Editor Returns

Ye Editor of ye News returned home Saturday from Huron, S.D. where he spent a couple of weeks under medical care and also visited at the home of his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Ole Hanson.

CITATION FOR HEARING ON PETITION FOR ADMINISTRATION.

State of Minnesota } SS.
County of Marshall }

In Probate Court

In the Matter of the Estate of Andrew Even Senum, Decedent.

The State of Minnesota, to All Whom It May Concern:

Whereas, Even Senum has filed in this Court his petition stating, among other things, that he is the father and one of the heirs of the above named decedent; that said decedent died intestate, a resident of the County of Marshall, State of Minnesota, left property in the County of Marshall, State of Minnesota, and was a citizen of the United States of America; and praying that administration of his estate be granted to George Senum:

Therefore, You are hereby cited to be and appear before said Court on the 8th day of February, 1930, at 10:00 o'clock A. M., in the Court House in the City of Warren in said County and State and show cause, if any you have, why said petition should not be granted.

Dated Jan. 4th, 1930.

This Chain Letter Is Different

We have consigned a goodly number of chain letters to the waste basket, but we got one the other day that was different. It asked us to write to ten friends and urge them to "Cross Crossings Cautiously!"

We will go our friend one better. Instead of writing ten personal letters, we are printing the message here where we hope that many times ten people will read it. If all who read will actually heed, this message may be instrumental in saving lives of several Minnesota people during 1930.

The advice does not apply to railroad crossings only, but to all highway intersections as well. In either case, "Cross Crossings Cautiously!" Tell your friends, so the chain will not be broken.

A Woman for Governor?

We recently received a broadside from the Record, at Grand Meadow, Minn, extolling Mrs. Manley L. Fosseen of Minneapolis and suggesting that she be put in the gubernatorial race, for the Republican nomination.

The suggestion is not inopportune at all. Women have the vote, why not the offices?

NOTICE!

The members of the Holt Co-operative Livestock Shipping Association will hold their annual meeting at the Community Hall in Holt on Monday, January 27th, at 1 p. m., to elect officers and transact any other business that may come before the meeting at that time.

C. A. Davis, Chairman.

N. S. A. News

For the fourth successive term a new attendance record has been established at the Northwest school of Agriculture, Crookston. Registrar J. W. Mlinar reports a total attendance at the close of the close of the first week of the winter term of 348 compared to 319 one year ago. and 298 two years ago. The fame of the local instution has spread throughout the country as indicated by the fact that students are now enrolled from four states and Canada, the majority coming from fifteen Northwestern Minnesota ccunties.

To keep pace with the rapid growth in enrollment, the most extensive building program in years will be carried out during the summer. This include a modern Physical Education building, enlargement of the library, auditorium, and rearrangement of offices in the Administration building, and extension of the heating plant.

G. N. Better Farming Special

The Great Northern Better Farming Special Train closed the first week of its tour in Minnesota at Ada in Norman County, on Saturday afternoon with a large and enthusiastic attendance of more than eight hundred people. All of the business men of Ada and several from surrounding towns and practically every farmer for miles around visited the train and heard the program. It was the largest crowd that ever attended a similar train in this part of the state.

Salts Fine for Aching Kidneys

When Back Hurts Flush Your Kidneys as You Clean Your Bowels

Most folks forget that the kidneys, like the bowels, sometimes get sluggish and clogged and need a flushing occasionally, else we have backache and dull misery in the kidney region, severe headaches, rheumatic twinges, torpid liver, acid stomach, sleeplessness and all sorts of bladder disorders.

You simply must keep your kidneys active and clean and the moment you feel an ache or pain in the kidney region begin drinking lots of water. Also get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any good drug store here, take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and is intended to flush clogged kidneys and help stimulate them to activity. It also helps neutralize the acids in the urine so they no longer irritate, thus helping to relieve bladder disorders.

Jad Salts is inexpensive; makes a delightful effervescent lithia water drink which everybody should take now and then to help keep their kidneys clean.

A well-known local druggist says he sells lots of Jad Salts to folks who believe in trying to correct kidney trouble while it is only trouble.

Muskrat Found Glasses

Last summer Ronald Waggershauser dived off a pier at Lake Mendota, Wis., and lost his glasses. Jack Hayward helped him look for the spectacles, but they could not be located on the bottom of the lake. Lately, Hayward noticed something shining in a muskrat house built near the pier, and investigated. He found that a muskrat had taken possession of the glasses. Hayward returned them to their owner.

Bucket Holds Ten Tons

At the Buffalo docks there has just been put into service the largest clam shell bucket ever built. From the bottom of its scoop to the top of its head this monster bucket measures 18 feet 9 inches, and when lowered, ready for action, it has a spread of 19 feet, covering an area of 133 square feet. At one grab it is able to pick up 10 gross tons.

AFTER OPERATIONS

"I was three times under an operation and I was very weak and nervous and could not eat. I suffered for ten years. I learned about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and my husband bought me a bottle. I felt a little better and he bought me two more. I had the Compound in my home for two years and took it all the time. Now I feel strong and can do anything."—Mrs. A. Michalk, 5443 Mitchell Ave., Detroit, Michigan.

THEN AND THERE

HISTORY TOLD AS IT WOULD BE WRITTEN TODAY

By IRVIN S. COBB

London in the Grip of Twin Horrors

In London once it took one phase of destruction to cure another. The Great Plague defied all human efforts to stop it. Then the Great Fire came along and by it the wings of the terrible thing which had devastated the city effectually were singed.

It is pretty well agreed now that in its essentials the Plague was very closely akin to the bubonic disease which, within recent decades, has raged over many parts of the world and still at intervals rages in some of them. Scientists of medicine and hygiene have learned how to curb its ravages now. The rat which carries the fleas which spread the malady is hunted down and exterminated; and quarantine helps in the fight and so does sanitation. But in London in the time of the second Charles even learned physicians knew little of these protective measures, and ordinary folk knew practically nothing at all of them. Typhus and typhoid and smallpox ravaged the world, and about every so often cholera came out of the Far East to claim its thousands and its hundreds of thousands.

By the best accounts, the Plague appeared in December of 1664. But it was not until the summer of the following year that the populace of the crowded filthy city realized that a terrible and constantly increasing peril confronted them. In one week, at the height of the epidemic, nearly 7,000 known and recorded deaths from the disease occurred. Those who could, fled away. Victims were deserted by their own families; corpses lay in the highways and accumulated in the burying-grounds. Grass grew in the streets. At times, the only sounds to be heard abroad were the tolling of bells as the drivers of the death-carts signalled the rows of silent houses for the bringing out of the bodies.

With the coming of cooler weather the Plague somewhat abated, but it was not banished until 1666, when there broke out a fire which practically wiped out the heart of London and incidentally burnt up the germs of the sickness. This fire, which in point of destruction was one of the greatest ever occurring in a populous community, had to it another beneficent side. London was rebuilt, not of wood, but of brick and stone.

To the immortal Samuel Pepys posterity is indebted for the best on-the-spot contemporary accounts of both Plague and Fire. This man left behind him in his so-called diary the most valuable record of the life, the manners and the morals in the Seventeenth century that has been preserved. He was secretary to the English admiralty in the reigns of two of the Stuarts—Charles II and James II—and for his own purposes he kept, in a sort of short hand cypher, an account of what happened, not only in his own life, but in the life which went on all about him. Following his death, his journals were discovered and eventually were decoded. Thus it befell that, thanks to Samuel Pepys' garrulous egotism and his passion for setting down with infinite pains an infinity of petty details, we today may get through his eyes and his pen a series of splendid pictures of bygone times stretching along through one of the most picturesque periods of European history.

Extracts from Pepy's writings—translated entries lifted from his secret diary—form the basis for the accompanying article.

UNDER date of April 30, 1665, Pepys made the entry which ushered in his day-to-day account of the growth and progress of the dreadful visitation. He wrote this:

"Great fears of the sickness here in the city, it being said that two or three houses are already shut up. God preserve us all!"

Substantially a week later he set down these words:

"May 7. The hottest day that ever I felt in my life. This day, much against my will, I did in Druary Lane see two or three houses marked with a red cross upon the doors, and 'Lord have mercy upon us,' writ there; which was a sad sight to me, being the first of the kind that to my remembrance I ever saw."

From Pepys' records we may note how within a month and a little more the pestilence had spread until it claimed its victims in hosts:

"July 12. A solemn fast day for the plague is growing upon us.

"July 13. Above 700 died of the plague this week.

"July 20. Walked to Redriffe, where I hear the sickness is, and indeed is scattered almost everywhere. There dying 1,089 of the plague this week.

Burying by Daylight.

"August 3. To Dagenhams. All the way people citizens, walking to and fro, inquire how the plague is in the city this week by the bill (death list); which by chance, at Greenwich I had heard was 2,020 of the plague and 3,000 and odd of all diseases. By and by met my Lord Crewe returning; Mr. Marr telling me by the way how a maid-servant of Mr. John Wright's (who lives thereabouts) falling sick of the plague, she was removed to an outhouse and a nurse appointed to look to her; who, being once absent, the maid got out of the house at the window, and ran away. The nurse coming a knocking and having no answer, believed she was dead and went and told Mr. Wright so; who and his lady were in great strait what to do to get her buried. At last resolved to go to Brentwood hard by, being in the parish, and there get people to do it. But they would not; so he went home full of trouble, and in the way met the wench walking over the common, which frighted him worse than before; and he was forced to send people to take her, which he did; and they got one of the pest coaches and put her into it to carry her to a pest-house. And passing in a narrow lane, Sir Anthony Browne, with his brother and some friends in the coach, met this coach with the curtains drawn close. The brother being a young man and believing there might be some lady in it that would not be seen, and the way being narrow, he thrust his head out of his own into her coach and to look, and there saw somebody look very ill, and in a sick dress, and stunk mightily; which the coachman also cried out upon. And presently they come up to some people that stood looking after it and told our gallants that it was a maid of Mr. Wright's carried away sick of the plague; which put the young gentleman into a fright, and almost cost him his life but is now well again.

"August 12. The people die so that now it seems they are fain to carry the dead to be buried by daylight, the night's not sufficing to do it in. And my Lord Mayor commands people to be in at nine at night all, as they say, that the sick may have liberty to go abroad for air.

"August 13. It was dark before I could get home, and so land at Churchyard stairs, where to my great trouble, I met a dead corpse of the plague in the narrow alley just bringing down a little pair of stairs. But I thank God I was not much disturbed at it. However, I shall beware of being late abroad again.

"August 22. I went away and walked to Greenwich, in my way seeing a coffin with a dead body therein, dead of the plague, lying in an open close belonging to Coome Farm, which was carried out last night and the parish have not appointed anybody to bury it, but only set a watch there all day and night, that nobody should go thither or come thence; this disease making us more cruel to one another than we are to dogs.

"August 31. Up, and after putting several things in order to my removal to Woolwich, the plague having a great increase this week, beyond all expectation, of almost 2,000, making the general bill 7,000 odd 100; and the plague above 6,000. Thus this month ends with great sadness upon the public, through the greatness of the plague everywhere through the kingdom almost. Every day sadder and sadder news of its increase. In the city died this week 7,496, and of them 6,102 of the plague. But it is feared that the true number of the dead this week is near 10,000; partly from the poor that cannot be taken notice of through the greatness of the number, and partly from the Quakers and others, that will not have any bell ring for them.

"October 16. I walked to the Tower; but, Lord! how empty the streets are and melancholy, so many poor sick people in the streets, full of sores; and so many sad stories overheard as I walk, everybody talking of this dead and that man sick, and so many in this place and so many in that. And they tell me that in Westminster there is never a physician, and but one apothecary left, all being dead; but that there are great hopes of a great decrease this week. God send it!

"October 29. In the streets did overtake and almost run upon two women crying and carrying a man's coffin between them; I suppose the husband of one of them, which, methinks, is a sad thing."

The epidemic, although diminishing, continued to claim its victims for more than a year thereafter. It scarcely had been stayed when on September 2, 1666, the Great Fire broke out. This disaster proved in some measure a disguised blessing, for in the flames the lingering seeds of the disease were destroyed, and London never thereafter was devastated of its people by so grievous an affliction.

Flames Scorch the Thames.

Regarding the fire Pepys entered in his diary a graphic first-hand description. This is what he wrote:

"September 2, 1666, Lord's Day. Some of our maids sitting up late last night to get things ready against our feast today, Jane called us up about three in the morning to tell us a great fire they saw in the city. So I rose and slipped on my night-gowne and went to her window, and thought it to be on the back side of Market-Lane at the farthest; but being unused to such fires as followed, I thought it far enough off, and so went to bed again and to sleep. About seven rose again to dress myself, and there looked out at the window and saw the fire not so much as it was and further off. By and by Jane comes and tells me that she hears that above 300 houses have been burned down by the fire we saw and that it is now burning down all Fish street, by London bridge. So I made myself ready presently and walked to the Tower and there got up upon one of the high places, Sir J. Robihson's little son going up with me; and there I did see the houses at that end of the bridge all on fire, and an infinite great fire on this and the other side the end of the bridge. . . .

So I down to the water side, and there got a boat and through bridge, and there was a lamentable fire. . . . Everybody endeavoring to remove their goods, and flinging into the river or bringing them into lighters that lay off; poor people staying in their houses as long as till the very fire touched them, and then running into boats or clambering from one pair of stairs by the water side to another. And among other things, the poor pigeons, I perceive, were loth to leave their houses, but hovered about the windows and balconys till they were some of them burned, their wings, and fell down. Having staid, and in an hour's time seen the fire rage every way and nobody, to my sight, endeavoring to quench it, but to remove their goods and leave all to the fire; and having seen it get as far as the Steele yard, and the wind mighty high and driving it into the city; and everything, after so long a drought, proving combustible, even the very stones of churches.

The King Commands.

"I to White Hall (with a gentleman with me who desired to go off from the Tower, to see the fire, in my boat); to White Hall and there up to the King's closett in the Chappell, where people come about me and I did give them an account dismayed them all, and word was carried in to the King. So I was called for, and did tell the King and Duke of Yorke what I saw, and that unless his Majesty did command houses to be pulled down nothing could stop the fire. They seemed much troubled, and the King commanded me to go to my Lord Mayor from him, and command him to spare no houses but to pull down before the fire every way.

"Here meeting with Captain Cocke, I in his coach which he lent me, and Creed with me to Paul's, and there walked along Watling street as well as I could, every creature coming away loaden with goods to save, and here and there sick people carried away in beds. Extraordinary goods carried in carts and on backs. At last met my Lord Mayor in Canning street, like a man spent, with a handkerchief about his neck. To the King's message he cried, like a fainting woman, 'Lord! what can I do? I am spent: people will not obey me. I have been pulling down houses; but the fire overtakes us faster than we can do it!' That he needed more soldiers, and that, for himself he must go and refresh himself, having been up all night. So he left me, and I him, and walked home seeing people almost distracted, and no manner of means used to quench the fire. The houses, too, so very thick thereabouts and full of matter for burning, as pitch and tarr, in Thames street; and warehouses of oyle, wines, brandy, and other things.

"Soon as dined, I and Moone away, and walked through the city, the streets full of nothing but people and horses and carts loaden with goods, ready to run over one another and removing goods from one house to another. They now removing out of Canning street and further; and among others I now saw my little goldsmith, Stokes, receiving some friend's goods, whose house itself was burned the day after. We parted at Paul's; he home, and I to Paul's wharf, where had appointed a boat to attend me, and took in Mr. Carcasse and his brother, whom I met in the streets, and carried them below and above bridge to and again to see the fire, which was now got further, both below and above, and no likelihood of stopping it. Met with the King and Duke of Yorke in their barge, and with them to Queenhithe, and there called Sir Rickard Browne to them. Their order was only to pull down houses apace, and so below bridge at the water side; but little was or could be done, the fire coming upon them so fast.

"So near the fire as we could for smoke; and all over the Thames, with one's face in the wind, you were almost burned with a shower of firedrops. This is very true; so as houses were burned by these drops and flakes of fire, three or four, nay, five or six houses, one from another. When we could endure no more upon the water, we to a little ale house on the Bankside, over against the Three Cranes, and there staid till it was dark almost, and saw the fire grow; and as it grew darker, appeared more and more, and in corners and upon steeples, and between churches and houses, as far as we could see up the hill of the city, in a most horrid malicious bloody flame, not like the fine flame of an ordinary fire.

We staid till, it being darkish, we saw the fire as only one entire arch of above a mile long: it made me weep to see it. The churches, houses, and all on fire and flaming at once; and a horrid noise the flames made, and the crackling of houses at their ruine."

Wooden Rails Once Used

In the Seventeenth and Eighteenth centuries wooden rails were used on the colliery roads near Newcastle-on-Tyne, England. In 1735 flat iron bars were substituted. In 1789 William Jessup introduced a new form of cast-iron rail, 1¾ inches wide at head, and carried by a thin web deeper at the middle than at the ends. These rails were held in place by spikes into cross-pieces, or rock beds, and in 1820 the first malleable iron trough rails, 15 feet long, made their appearance, and the standard gauge was set at 4 feet 8½ inches. These rails were fixed to crossties with spikes very much the same as today, and the ties were laid 3 feet apart. One might say that the groundwork for railroading was laid before America ever entered the field. From 1825 until the present time the equipment has been changed and perfected largely by American invention, but little change has been made in the rails.

Bank of England's Gold Stored Under Ground

Thousands of people who pass the new Bank of England every day regard the two bronze doors, each weighing two tons, at the principal entrance in Bartholomewlane, as part of the bank's defenses, says the London Times. They are, however, merely decorative compared with the barriers of the underground fortress 80 feet below. There lie the strong rooms which have been built in the heart of the bank site to house the gold and securities against the danger of fire or possible bomb and gas attacks in war time. The greater part of the five years already spent on rebuilding has been devoted to these strong rooms, for which thousands of tons of concrete reinforced with steel have been used. The construction of the doors is being kept a closely guarded secret. Forty tons, however, is stated to be a moderate estimate of their weight. Even while the hundreds of workmen have been busy on the site, gold weighing about 1,000 tons has been stored in the bank; its value being about $650,000,000.

Serious Problem Faced by Chinese Christians

In its war on superstition, which has involved the destruction of a number of temple idols, the Nanking government has aroused the Buddhists of Hankow, who, claiming that overdrastic attacks have been made on their faith, have appointed a delegation to visit Nanking and to demand that a policy of no discrimination against Buddhism be adopted. The delegation declares that if religion is to be suppressed or religious property confiscated then they demand that all religions be treated on the same basis. The government, in accepting a petition from the Buddhists, has let it be known that the delegation will be given a hearing. Holding office under the government are many Chinese Christians who are now to be faced with the problem of agreeing to attack their own religion as well as Buddhism or else show why the Buddhists are being denied religious liberty.

A Life of Thrills

Orville Wright said at a dinner in Dayton:

"Flying has been made safe now, but it was, let me tell you, a very exciting business at the start, full of unique thrills, like the young millionaire's life.

"'Somebody asked the young millionaire, you know, if his had been an interesting life.

"'Has it?' he answered. 'Why, I'm only thirty-two, and I've had five wives and gone through three fortunes and four sanitariums.'"

Dorothy's Mother Proves Claim

Children don't ordinarily take to medicines but here's one that all of them love. Perhaps it shouldn't be called a medicine at all. It's more like a rich, concentrated food. It's pure, wholesome, sweet to the taste and sweet in your child's little stomach. It builds up and strengthens weak, puny, underweight children, makes them eat heartily, brings the roses back to their cheeks, makes them playful, energetic, full of life. And no bilious, headachy, constipated, feverish, fretful baby or child ever failed to respond to the gentle influence of California Fig Syrup on their little bowels. It starts lazy bowels quick, cleans them out thoroughly, tones and strengthens them so they continue to act normally, of their own accord.

Millions of mothers know about California Fig Syrup from experience. A Western mother, Mrs. J. G. Moore, 119 Cliff Ave., San Antonio, Texas, says: "California Fig Syrup is certainly all that's claimed for it. I have proved that with my little Dorothy. She was a bottle baby and very delicate. Her bowels were weak. I started her on Fig Syrup when she was a few months old and it regulated her, quick. I have used it with her ever since for colds and every little set-back and her wonderful condition tells better than words how it helps."

Don't be imposed on. See that the Fig Syrup you buy bears the name, "California" so you'll get the genuine, famous for 50 years.

Inglepin was undeterred by the frosty note in his caller's tone.

"No necessity for pique," he asserted briskly. "I can't afford to run the risk of having good plans spoiled by a man's weakness for a woman." The china-blue eyes danced again with the flickering light that seemed at once to warm and chill them. "Seen it happen too often. Shouldn't put it past Ben to use her for that purpose."

"She can have no influence upon me, Mr. Inglepin."

"Hate her, eh? Same as her father? Same as Chater?"

"Hate her?" And suddenly a flame blazed up in Fellowes. "Yes, I hate her! I hate her for my stripes. I hate her on Collishawe's account. I hate her for the treason she practices. I—I hate her!"

Joshua Inglepin sat back with a little grunt of satisfaction.

"You'll do," he decided. "I'm not so sure 'tis—ah—what you call it, Captain Fellowes; but the sentiment will safeguard my interests."

"And what may your interests be?" Fellowes asked harshly.

"Need you ask?" countered the merchant. "I am on all fours with you in this matter, sir. I'd see Ben hung high as Hamen, and Chater beside him. The girl—Well, we needn't discuss her. 'Tis not pleasant for you, and I'd not fight a woman, might I help it."

"What of Collishawe?"

"That's your affair."

"Natheless, he must figure in any bargain we strike," declared Fellowes.

"Granted," conceded Joshua, "within limitations."

"As what?"

"To begin with, we must inform the proper authorities of your discoveries. I'm as skeptical as yourself of the efficacy of this step, but 'twould be inadvisable to ignore it. I am, I may say—" the mellow voice became a shade pompous—"on terms of intimacy with Governor Tompkins, who is also in command of the military district for the administration. Whatever he can do to aid us, we may rely upon. I'll see him, myself. So shall you. And we'll present the matter to him without reservation, eh?"

"I am willing," Fellowes agreed. "And then, sir?"

"Come with me, if you please."

Joshua took his hat, and motioned toward the door.

"Don't wait for me, Howell," he called to the gray clerk as they passed to the street.

Fellowes was silent until they had crossed the road.

"What other limitations to our bargain had you in mind, sir?" he asked.

"Only such as motives of patriotism should place upon the satisfaction of private enmity. Your pursuit of Captain Collishawe must await the destruction of my brother's conspiracy."

"To pursue them back we'll require a ship."

"Exactly my thought, captain! 'Tis a ship we are after this moment."

They entered South street, and turned toward Gouverneur. Ahead of them was Christian Bergh's shipyard, and Fellows' face lightened at sight of the graceful fabric that loomed above the scaffolding of the ways.

"Ah, the beauty! The sweetest brig I ever saw!"

"No shipwright like old Christian," Inglepin responded.

"Is she yours?"

"Not yet. Christian built her for speculation. Out of blind pride and confidence in his own skill."

"She's heavier built than the regular clippers," commented Fellowes. "What's her tonnage?"

"Close to four hundred, I think. Christian built her for strength, no less than speed. And she's well sparred, you see. You could drive her in a gale under tops'ls."

"But she's long for her beam."

"Yes, that's to give her clearance. She's 115 feet over all, and 28 feet beam."

Rounding the bow, Fellowes saw the name Centurion carved in square, block letters just aft of the hawser pipes. He stood so long on his vantage point, feasting his eyes on the swelling lines of the hull, estimating the sail spread of the lofty masts, fancying how she could be pushed in ordinary winds, and driven in dirty weather, that he did not hear Joshua's summons until it had been repeated.

"Oh, I beg your pardon," he exclaimed, and scrambled down to shake hands with leathery, squinty-eyed Christian Bergh.

"You like her, ja?" the old shipwright asked proudly.

"She's the handsomest thing I ever saw, Mr. Bergh. I only wish I could buy her."

"Fifteen t'ousan' tollars I ask for her, mit sails, battery, eferyt'ing."

"I haven't fifteen thousand dollars, but if I had—"

"You don't need it," Joshua interrupted abruptly. "She's sold." He turned to Bergh. "I'll pay the money into Barkers for you, eh, Christian?"

"Dot suits me, Mr. Inglepin. Undt anyt'ing you vant I put in her."

Inglepin took Fellowes by the arm, and walked a few feet aside.

"I'll wager you can run down the True Bounty with that, Captain," exulted the merchant.

"I can run down the True Bounty," assented Fellowes, "but she's no use to me unless she can fight the Badger."

"That's your bargain? Fight a King's sloop-of-war with a privateer?"

"Yes. Fight her, and take her."

"A dangerous business! If 'twas a Frenchman, now, or a bloody Dago But a Britisher!"

"Aye, the best ship of her size in the King's fleet," Fellowes rejoined, uncompromisingly.

There was comprehension, yes, and respect, in the look Joshua gave the Long Islander.

"Hate him that much, eh? But there'd be no sense in sinking yourself doing it."

"None," Fellowes admitted. "But with the right battery—"

He broke off, and hailed the shipwright, who loitered near, gazing lovingly on the thing he had created.

"Mr. Bergh. What guns were you figuring for her?"

"Vell, I leafe dot for you undt Mr. Inglepin. But if you put in carronades, beraps we say eighteen-pounders, den you better not hafe more dan sixteen—undt a couple of long twelves for chasers."

Fellowes shook his head.

"A privateer has no proper use for carronades," he said. "She should never fight at close range. Give us long twelves in the broadside batteries, and we'll mount a twenty-four-pounder Long Tom for'ard on a pivot."

"A twenty-four-pounder!" Mr. Inglepin cried protestingly. "You'd rack her to pieces."

But Christian Bergh dissented vociferously.

"Not dot Centurion! I buildt her for rough vork. Ja! We put in some more heafy beams in der fo'c's'le, undt brace der deck."

"Yes, you'd better reinforce those bulwarks, Mr. Bergh. I'd like her to be as strong as a navy vessel of her class."

"She vill be," promised the shipwright. "Mit dot brig you can fight a King's ship, if she chase you. Ja!"

They talked then of storage room, and spare sails and cables, and arrangements in the galley for a numerous crew—"you'd best reckon on a hundred and fifty men, captain," advised Inglepin. "Aside from our private ventures, I hope you'll have the luck to pick up prizes. And prizes take hands to bring them in." And afterward, in the glow of late afternoon, they said good-bye to Bergh, and retraced their steps to the warehouse in Front street. Joshua led the way to the table beside which they had held their earlier conversation.

"I am a business man, sir," he said, pointing to a chair. "And I find it more satisfactory to have definite agreements, of a contractural nature, with persons I deal with. So, if you have no objections, we will reduce our relations to writing. Perhaps you will be so kind as to express your side of the bargain?"

Fellowes peered out the small-paned window next him at the tree-bordered street, dusty and peaceful and very quiet since the workers had gone home. It was difficult to associate this soberly charming scene with all the wild and turgid events that had preceded it, difficult to imagine that only a few miles distant, off Sandy Hook, the Badger plied her errands on the blockade, that perhaps Collishawe had pressed three more men to take the place of Tom, Cuffee and himself.

He was conscious of Joshua Inglepin's china-blue eyes studying his expression with avid intensity.

Swedes Lovers of Beauty

To keep the Swedish railroad stations cheery, the state-owned railroads maintain a special flower garden and hothouse outside of Stockholm. About 50,000 potted plants and 100,000 perennials are annually distributed to the stations of the Stockholm district alone, and the big central station in Stockholm gets not only huge potted laurel trees for the summer season, but fresh cut flowers every day. In the country practically every railroad station has its own flower beds, cared for by the personnel between trains and like the spotless buffets or restaurants inside, they add considerably to the joy of travel. Such refinements the Swedes call "trafik kulture."

Courtship by Song

A vivid description has been given of the courtship of the golden plover: The male bird mounts about 100 feet and starts to sing, flying slowly around the spot on the beach where his desired mate is listening. Sometimes several males will vie for one mate, but they make it purely a singing contest rather than a fight. The song carries over a great stretch of moor, attracting females in the vicinity.

Use for Egg-Timer

A Belfast (Maine) woman has discovered another use for an egg-timer, one built on the lines of an hour glass. When she puts in a long distance call which she wishes to hold to three minutes and no more, she sets the egg timer in front of her and it is a sure indicator of the fleeting time.

Boy, Four, Admits He Killed His Mother

Batavia, N. Y.—Four-year-old Elmer Schulz, Jr., admitted to police that he fired the shot which killed his twenty-six-year-old mother. Her husband, a farmer, was held by police since her death. Police released him when little Elmer, weeping, told how he pointed his father's shotgun at his mother, said playfully, "I'm going to shoot you, mamma," and pulled the trigger.

After coming home from hunting, Schulz had left the gun in the kitchen. He thought it was not loaded, he told police.

"I did it with daddy's gun," the boy sobbed. "Mother was in the kitchen. I said 'I'm going to shoot you, mamma,'" he went on. "I didn't know the gun would shoot."

After his confession, a policeman handed the child the shotgun and asked him to show how he shot his mother. Straining under the weight of the gun, Elmer raised it to his shoulder and snapped the trigger.

The case has been placed in the hands of the district attorney of Genesee county, state police said recently.

PHANTOM BANDIT BECOMES DEFIANT

Would Return to France Despite Reward for Capture.

San Francisco.—Pierre Dupres—that is not his real name—who escaped from Devil's Island, the French penal colony, hopes to return to France, admitting that the call of his native land grows stronger constantly.

There is another reason why Pierre Dupres wishes to return to France. The "Phantom Bandit," who terrorized provincial highways a quarter of a century ago, desires to visit the grave of his "mama."

Despite a reward for his capture, dead or alive, Dupres has told his story to Dr. Glenn Hoover, professor of economics at Mills college.

Dupres told of his beginning in crime—the slums of Paris, where he robbed mite boxes in churches. He was the first to use a motor cycle, which permitted him to speed from place to place, thus earning the sobriquet of "Phantom Bandit."

He was captured, condemned to the guillotine for attempting to murder a French policeman. Then it was decided that he should go to the penal colony.

The voyage from St. Martin de Ree to Isle de Diable was made on the convict ship Loire with 1,070 men kept in cages and suffering the travail of 22 days at sea.

"One man broke a razor, swallowed it and then jumped into the sea," Dupres told Doctor Hoover. "They saved him and nursed him back to life. Once they turned live steam into a cage full of men to quiet them. It did—forever."

Seven years Dupres spent at the penal colony.

"There men die of fever and starvation and a wheelbarrow carries the corpses away and the same wheelbarrow brings back maggoty bread and a little water," Dupres said.

"Prisoners die fast. None leave, and yet there is room for 2,000 more each year. There is no place to bury them. They are cast into the sea and sharks infest the waters."

Three times Dupres attempted to escape, then finally succeeded by offering to work among the lepers. He and other convicts managed to get away in an outrigger canoe.

The band reached the coast of French Guiana. All were captured but Dupres. He made his way by ship to Philadelphia.

Nose Cut Off in Auto Crash Sewed Back on

Steubenville, Ohio.—W. T. Fryam, age forty-five, Steubenville radio mechanic, lost his nose in an automobile accident near here.

At the hospital surgeons said the nose was cut off so precisely that if it could be found, Fryam would have his nose back again.

A search for the nose began. It wasn't in the ambulance which brought Fryam to the hospital, and police hurried to the scene of the wreck, where the nose was found on the windshield of Fryam's car.

Police took the nose back to the hospital and 45 minutes later Fryam was breathing through it again. Seventy stitches were necessary to sew the nose back in place.

Four Dead as Family Uses Oil to Start Fire

Phillipsburg, N. J.—Members of the Verenna family could not believe that it is dangerous to pour kerosene on a fire. Four of the nine children are dead as a result of repeated experiments.

Three children were suffocated and burned when Mrs. Verenna attempted to start a fire in the kitchen stove quickly by pouring kerosene on it.

One child was burned to death last May when the daughter, Sadie, made a similar experiment.

Four tombstones will mark the results of failure to profit by experience.

For COLDS

We all catch colds and they can make us miserable; but yours needn't last long if you will do this: Take two or three tablets of Bayer Aspirin just as soon as possible after a cold starts. Stay in the house if you can—keep warm. Repeat with another tablet or two of Bayer Aspirin every three or four hours, if those symptoms of cold persist. Take a good laxative when you retire, and keep bowels open. If throat is sore, dissolve three tablets in a quarter-glassful of water and gargle. This soothes inflammation and reduces infection. There is nothing like Bayer Aspirin for a cold, or sore throat. And it relieves aches and pains almost instantly. The genuine tablets, marked Bayer, are absolutely harmless to the heart.

BAYER ASPIRIN

Aspirin is the trade mark of Bayer Manufacture of Monoaceticacidester of Salicylicacid

Your Kidneys

Give Them Prompt Help When Needed.

KIDNEY disorders are too serious to ignore. It pays to heed the early signals. Scanty, burning or too frequent excretions; lameness, stiffness and constant backache are timely warnings.

To promote normal kidney action and assist your kidneys in cleansing your blood of poisonous wastes, use Doan's Pills. Endorsed the world over. Sold by dealers everywhere.

50,000 Users Endorse Doan's:

C. A. Hawkins, 68 Shotwell Street, San Francisco, Calif., says: "I was stiff and achy and had a persistent soreness across my back. My kidneys didn't seem to act right after a cold and I felt all out of sorts. Doan's Pills were what I needed. They made me feel like myself again. I now keep Doan's on hand and recommend them right along."

"Hello! Hello! How Much Does Happiness Cost?"

Only the price of learning a simple health rule, this smiling youngster finds!

"Happiness is on the other end of your phone too," says little Barbara

"HAPPINESS just radiates from our baby since we began giving her—"

What was it that Mrs. Fred E. Schmitt of 2023 Stone Street, Falls City, Nebraska, discovered, which she could give to her baby that made her happy, well, strong and buoyant?

Not a medicine; not a drug of any kind; just harmless bodily lubrication. Only that, and nothing more. Mrs. Schmitt's discovery that little Barbara kept well when she was made regular as clock work is the same discovery as has been made by millions of other people, who are enjoying the happiness of health because they use Nujol.

Babies, old folks, people in the prime of life—all alike need to have the bodily poisons (we all have them) regularly cleaned out. Nujol just gently, naturally, normally lubricates the action of your body which needs lubrication as much as any other machine.

Please remember that Nujol contains no drugs; is non-fattening; is not absorbed in any way by the body; can form no habit; cannot hurt you, no matter how much you take. All it can do is keep you internally clean, and make you continually feel better. Colorless, tasteless as pure water, Nujol will make you see the bright side of life; it will help you to get the most out of your life; it will make you wake up in the morning feeling fit, and help you to do a good day's work with a smile.

Millions of people have discovered this fact—why don't you? You can buy Nujol in sealed packages at all drug stores. It costs but a few cents, and makes you feel like a million dollars. Get a bottle today and see how brimming zestful health will boost your day's happiness.

A Letter from Anton Anderson

Emarado, N.D., Jan. 18, 1930

Holt Weekly News,
Holt, Minn.

Last month you published the final result of the liquidation of the Holt State Bank which was sent out by the Banking Division Dec. 4th, 1929. I see by the statement that it being only possible to salvage from the unpledged assets of the bank a sufficient amount to pay the preferred creditors 44 per cent. of their claim and not being able to pay any dividend to the general creditors.

As a creditor of the old bank I want to say it was a dirty deal from start to finish to rob its citizens of their life savings and could get by with it without being punished for the crime. What is the difference, to rob a bank from the inside or from the outside? The man that robs a bank from the outside, if caught and charged with crime, is given a life sentence. This should also apply to the man that robs the bank from the inside. And I want to say that some of the officers of the old bank that are at liberty today should be serving time for the crime that was committed in the Holt State Bank.

The Banking Department had no business to keep an insolvent bank running, and it took seven long years to wind up the affairs of the bank. The county attorney of Marshall county was not anxious to prosecute but was requested to do so, but he, too, waited and took his time until it was beyond the state of limitation. He failed to convict the men that were responsible for the crime that was committed out there where he had evidence enough to send the guilty parties to the pen for life. Wrong rules the land and waiting justice sleeps.

LESSON 87

PRODUCTION: A cow that takes two days to produce a pound of butterfat requires practically twice the amount of feed to support her body and practically twice the amount of labor as a cow that takes only one day to produce a pound of butterfat. For this reason, high producing dairy cows make over twice the net profit, often over four times the net profit, of ordinary cows.

MANUFACTURING: The quality standard set by Land O'Lakes Creameries for cream is that the cream must be perfectly sweet and entirely free from any off-flavor that may be caused from unclean separator or unclean cans, or from the cream being kept where the air is bad, such as a cellar with vegetables, or from feeds that impart a bad flavor, such as rye pasture, cabbage, or from rutabagas or silage being fed just before milking.

MARKETING: The successful market of any product depends in the long run on: First, having a good quality product to market; second, on having the product favorably known under a trade-mark or name; and third, having control over the marketing machinery thru which it is marketed. L.O'L. system is built to carry out these rules.

School Notes

High School

The English III class are studying Orations as an introduction to Public Speaking.

The English I class are studying "The Merchant of Venice." This will be dramatized in class.

Mrs. G. Sanoden, Russell Sanoden, and Mrs. H. Hanson visited school Monday. We are always glad to have visitors, and hope others will visit our institution of learning.

The pupils on the honor roll for the last six weeks period are:

Freshmen	Eleanor Larson
	Julius Faimen
	Esther Hagberg
Sophomore	Ferne Peterson
	Doris Leiran
Junior	Walter Steinhauer
	Verna Johnson

Seventh and Eighth Grades

The seventh and eighth grades have been studying the stars. They have learned the location of the large stars and groups of stars.

On Tuesday morning many of the seventh and eighth graders, including the teacher, overslept so they did not hear King George's speech. They are very interested in the Disarmament Conference and were disappointed when they awakened and discovered that they were several hours late.

The pupils on the honor roll for the last six weeks period are:

Seventh	Agnes Engebretson
	Ethel Nohre
	Kenneth Larson
Eighth	Minerva Hanson
	Margaret Davis

Fifth and Sixth Grades

The fifth and sixth grades had visitors during their Industrial Arts period. They were Mrs. Sanoden, Mrs. H. Hanson, Russell Sanoden.

No doubt they enjoyed their visit very much because it was during a very interesting period.

The pupils of the fifth grade are writing their autobiographies in the Language Class. They find it very interesting to look up the old family records.

Mr. Vieths showed the pupils some very interesting slides in the microscope one day. They were enjoyed by all.

The pupils on the honor roll for the last six weeks period are:

Fifth grade	Gertrude Nohre
	Gladys Michaelson
Sixth grade	Gertrude Nygaard
	Helena Johnson

Third and Fourth Grades

Opal Werner showed her superior knowledge over all the students in the 2d grade and was welcomed into 3d grade. We congratulate her.

The 3d and 4th grade room is very crowded. Miss Lanmin has moved her desk to the south-east corner.

A weight chart is used in our room to see whether the pupils are underweight or overweight.

A transportation project that was carried on by the 4th grade history class is now finished.

Our honor roll for this six weeks is:

Fourth grade	Opal Sanoden
	Beatrice Larson
Third Grade	Lorna Peterson
	Omer Hanson
	Adeloyd Larson

First and Second Grades

The first grade pupils broadcasted the story "The White Dove" during one reading period last week. The others tuned in on our radio to listen to the story. It proved interesting.

Lyla Johnson has been absent for some time on account of illness. We hope she will be back soon.

The movie which has been making for over a week is almost finished.

The pupils who were on the honor roll last six weeks were:

First grade	Vernice Tollefsrud
	Francis Johnson
Second grade	Opal Werner
	Milton Hanson

Two From Marshall County At Creamery Short Course

Walter Larson of Holt and B. M. Haugen of Newfolden, both of Marshall County, are registered with about sixty others for the Creamery Operators' Short Course at the Minnesota College of Agriculture, University Farm, St. Paul. The course opened on January 3rd, and will continue until February 14th.

Those who enter the course now in progress are expected to have at least six months' practical experience in a creamery as operator or as a helper.

To Take Inventory

A. L. Carlson, manager of the Carlson Mercantile Company store here, and secretary for the company who own and operate five store along the Great Northern in this territory, started out this week at Gatzke to take inventory of their stock.

O. C. Johnson of St. Hilaire, manager of the Carlson store there and a stockholder of the company, is assisting Mr. Carlson with the work.

Karlstad Advocate Burnt Out

The building which housed the Karlstad Advocate was destroyed by fire a week ago Sunday.

Thru the help of the citizens of Karlstad, Mr. Nordine, owner of the paper was able to save practically all equipment, and stock and fixtures.

The Advocate arrived here on time, issued from its new home in the closed bank building which Mr. Nordine purchased at once from the state banking department.

Leo Horien, owner of the local dary line, closed a deal last week with Theodor Ness and Edgar Horien in which he disposed of his Chev truck and drav line.

On the back page of this paper you will find an ad calling your attention to the Annual Meeting of the stockholders of the Farmers Co-operative Creamery Co.

We hope to see a good turn out at this meeting, as they are not only inviting the stockholders but all the patrons and their wives.

A free lunch will be served by the creamery at the close of the meeting.

Personal Property Tax List

This week we are publishing the Personal Property Tax List for 1929 and also the official proceedings of the county board.

The raise in personal property taxes for 1929 has led to a lot of discussing and cussing.

A Sour Stomach

In the same time it takes a dose of soda to bring a little temporary relief of gas and sour stomach, Phillips Milk of Magnesia has acidity completely checked, and the digestive organs all tranquilized. Once you have tried this form of relief you will cease to worry about your diet and experience a new freedom in eating.

This pleasant preparation is just as good for children, too. Use it whenever coated tongue or fetid breath signals need of a sweetener. Physicians will tell you that every spoonful of Phillips Milk of Magnesia neutralizes many times its volume in acid. Get the genuine, the name Phillips is important. Imitations do not act the same!

Kitten Made Trouble

A hungry kitten caused a turnout of a detail of Philadelphia police when Charles Rosenblum was alarmed by mysterious sounds in his butter and egg store after closing time. With drawn pistols the detachment of police searched the store and found the only intruder a strange cat out for a meal. The police withdrew while the store owner provided his uninvited guest with a saucer of cream.

Worth Remembering

Scratches can be removed from patent leather by applying a mixture of olive oil and jet black ink with a fine brush and repeating several times if necessary.

"My bargain is of the simplest, sir," he answered coolly. "You will purchase the brig Centurion for operation as a privateer. I am to be master of the brig, and I will sail as soon as may be, whenever the True Bounty puts to sea. My major object will be to overhaul the True Bounty, search her for papers or documents of treasonable purport, and if any such are found, seize all persons aboard her. Having done so much, I shall be at liberty to make every attempt to bring the sloop-of-war Badger to action, after which I will return to this port, and render account to you of my operations."

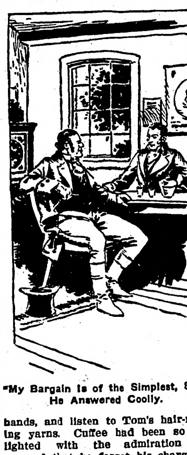
"Clearly phrased," applauded Joshue, grasping a quill pen in his chubby hand. "I will write it, by your leave, sir. A mere matter of form, captain, but advisable, always advisable." He scribbled rapidly at a sheet of foolscap. "Here, sign if you please."

Fellowes wrote his name, with a perverse sense of futility in the gesture.

CHAPTER IX

The Chase Begins

To the considerable amusement of Joshua Inglepin, Fellowes was obliged to rescue Tom and Cuffee from a ring of admiring idlers who crowded the taproom of the Washington hotel to watch the negro twisting horseshoes and breaking bricks in his great hands, and listen to Tom's hair-raising yarns. Cuffee had been so delighted with the admiration he aroused that he forgot his charge to restrict Tom's drinking, with the result that Mr. Grogan was a good bit more than three sheets in the wind.



"My Bargain Is of the Simplest, Sir," He Answered Coolly.

"D'you want to go with me as bosun in the Centurion privateer?" demanded Fellowes.

"Boshun?"

"That's what I said. But I won't have a drunkard piping my fo'c's'le."

Cuffee, who had been humbly apologetic over his dereliction from duty, was unable to confine his enthusiasm at this news.

"Yo' ketch him ship wid Long Tom, Mars'r Fellowe'?" he cried, eyes shining.

"Yes, but her gunner is going to be a man I can depend on. Frankly, I'm at a loss what to do with you two."

"Tush," said the merchant, "we'll send 'em to Christian Bergh. He can rig hammocks for them aboard the brig. Here, Tom, give this line to Mr. Bergh. He'll take care of you. And now, by your leave, Captain, we'll have a bite of dinner, and after wait upon his excellency."

Fellowes' head was jammed with an incoherent stream of thoughts as he walked beside the merchant under the weighted, green boughs of the tulip trees. His mind was concentrated upon the future. He was planning the berthing of one hundred and fifty men, estimating the quantities of powder and shot for great guns and small, the proportion of boarding-pikes to cutlasses, of pistols to muskets, designing special broadside ports for the Long Tom in either bulwark, so that by yawing in flight the Centurion might sting a pursuer to the utmost.

He scarcely heard Joshua Inglepin's conversation; his responses were mechanical. Eating his food, drinking the choice Madeira, it was always the same: Joshua's voice, declaiming positively, his own measured responses, the turgid stream of his thoughts.

They left the house and walked down Broadway. In Bowling Green they were challenged by a picket, but Joshua's name passed them inside the grounds of Government house, and they ascended the wide stairs of the portico among a procession of aides-de-camp and politicians. A short wait, then, and they were ushered into the presence of Governor Tompkins.

The governor was both courteous and interested.

"Captain Fellowes? Ah, yes, to be sure. Knew your father well, sir. A shame he left the legislature, but he was determined for diplomacy. Well, well! And you have been in the enemy's hands? Flogged, b'gad! And there are Federalists who would assure the country that no honest Americans have been pressed and there's not such a tool as the cat in the British fleet! But tell me your story, sir."

He listened keenly, with an occasional interjection, drawing out Joshua's theories, and after his callers had concluded delivered instant judgment.

"Your lawyer friend was in the right, Captain Fellowes. We could never maintain your evidence in judicial proceedings, civil or military. Moreover, 'twould be bad politics to attempt it, for the Federalists would make capital out of our efforts. A prosecution, d'you see? A partisan attack upon a leader of their faction. No, no, 'twouldn't do. 'Twouldn't do at all, sir. But don't think I'm belittling the value of your information. Circumstantially, it bears out evidence we have been accumulating this past twelve-month. The fact is, gentlemen, New England is rotten with intrigue against the national government. There's a move afoot now to summon a convention of delegates of the dissatisfied states to take action to secure a peace. There's open talk of secession."

He was silent for some minutes.

"Joshua, you have the right idea," he decided at last. "This is a matter for private enterprise. But—are you certain you wish to bring your brother to justice? Should the evidence Captain Fellowes seeks come to light, 'twould be a hanging job, my friend."

Joshua Inglepin's features contorted spasmodically, with such a congestion of blood that Fellowes wondered if he ought to loosen the man's stock. But Joshua waved him away.

"I'm—all right." Passion throbbed in the merchant's voice. "Damme, Governor, who should bring my brother to justice, if not I? Isn't he a reproach to my name?"

"Yet, after all, your brother," the governor reminded him. "And there is the young lady. I fear, gentlemen, if the affair is as black as 'tis painted—"

Joshua Inglepin fairly shouted at Fellowes:

"Well, Captain, what have we to say to that? Shall we shrink from our task because a woman is concerned with it?"

Fellowes looked from one to the other, icily aloof.

"I have settled that issue with Mr. Inglepin," he said quietly. "Miss Inglepin must take her chance. She is not—" he struggled for the right phrase, anxious neither to overblame nor excuse—"a loyal American, your excellency."

"Forgive me, captain, if I intrude upon your personal affairs," replied the governor. "But let me ask again: are you sure you will not regret your participation? Hatred is a bitter medicine."

"Not so bitter," Joshua spoke up fiercely. "A man hates for the satisfaction of it! There's zest in a right, proper hatred. Take Ben. I hate him because he's disloyal. I hate him because he's my brother. I hate him because he's a Federalist. And I might go on indefinitely at the same rate. If I can live to see Ben ruined, I'll die happy. Happy, by G—d, sir! Eh, Fellowes?"

"I have no expectation of happiness," Fellowes answered wearily. "But we wander from the point of our visit. Your excellency has not said you'll help us."

"By all means in my power," the governor returned promptly. "The Secret Service shall be instructed to protect you, and report every move of these people." He paused. "I suppose you'll wish to have the young lady watched?"

"She must take her chance with the others," Fellowes insisted. "We'll play no favorites, sir."

Joshua Inglepin clipped his arm, savagely peremptory.

"Aye, no favorites, damme," rasped the merchant. "You can't afford 'em when you hate, Fellowes. I know!"

Violin East and West

A leading music house says: "We have no record of ever having heard of the Chinese making a violin, and the instruments made by the Japs are of the very cheap commercial quality. The violin took root in Japan during the World war. Since the peace Germany and France have furnished practically all of the cheap instruments for America, and the Japs are out of the picture. We have no records of any well-known Russian makers. However, the violin is an extremely popular instrument all through eastern Europe, and doubtless thousands of them have been constructed in Russia, and perhaps there are some good makers there. None of them, however, seems to have been outstanding."—Washington Star.

Lives in Monoplane

A Berlin man uses a discarded monoplane for a dwelling place. The forward part of the fuselage, with windows commanding a view in three directions, is utilized as a living and sleeping room. The rear forms the kitchen. Above it rises a chimney that describes a letter "S" near the rudder.

FAMILY DOCTOR LEARNED THIS ABOUT CONSTIPATION

Dr. Caldwell loved people. His years of practice convinced him many were ruining their health by careless selection of laxatives. He determined to write a harmless prescription which would get at the cause of constipation, and correct it.

Today, the prescription he wrote in 1885 is the world's most popular laxative! He prescribed a mixture of herbs and other pure ingredients now known as Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, in thousands of cases where bad breath, coated tongue, gas, headaches, biliousness and lack of appetite or energy showed the bowels of men, women and children were sluggish. It proved successful in even the most obstinate cases; old folks liked it for it never gripes; children liked its pleasant taste. All drugstores today have Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin in bottles.

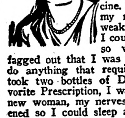
Nervous, Could Not Sleep—Weak, All Fagged Out



St. Paul, Minn.—"I would say to all women who are nervous, take Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, there is nothing that will build up the nerves like this medicine. I was rundown, my nerves were so weak and upset that I could not sleep, felt so weak and all fagged out that I was not in shape to do anything that required strength. I took two bottles of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, I was feeling like a new woman, my nerves were strengthened so I could sleep and get my rest and I was built up generally." — Mrs. Tillie Gibford, 555 Canada St. Dealers.

Ancient Baby Carriage

Augusta, Maine, claims one of the most interesting baby carriages in the state. It is sixty-five years old and only recently was removed from attic treasures. The wooden-ribbed wheels are large, and the seat will accommodate a seven-year-old child. The top, which tilts, has fringed edges.

If you are a reposeful man, you don't like to be go-got by a gogetter.

Los Angeles Boy Needed Help

Leroy Young, 1116 Georgia St., Los Angeles, is a "regular fellow," active in sports, and at the top in his classes at school. To look at him now, you'd think he never had a day's sickness but his mother says: "When Leroy was just a little fellow, we found his stomach and bowels were weak. He kept suffering from constipation. Nothing he ate agreed with him. He was fretful, feverish and puny.

"When we started giving him California Fig Syrup his condition improved quickly. His constipation and biliousness stopped and he has had no more trouble of that kind. I have since used California Fig Syrup with him for colds and upset spells. He likes it because it tastes so good and I like it because it helps him so wonderfully!"

California Fig Syrup has been the trusted standby of mothers for over 50 years. Leading physicians recommend it. It is purely vegetable and works with Nature to regulate, tone and strengthen the stomach and bowels of children so they get full nourishment from their food and waste is eliminated in a normal way.

Four million bottles used a year shows how mothers depend on it. Always look for the word "California" on the carton to be sure of getting the genuine.

Hugged by "Gorilla," She Asks $302,300

Los Angeles, Calif.—Embraced on Broadway by a man costumed as a gorilla, Mrs. Hazel Pasley asks for $302,300 damages in a suit filed against the Principal Theaters, Inc., and others.

The gorilla man was advertising a motion picture.

After her experience, Mrs. Pasley asserts, she suffered from delusions that hair like that of the gorilla was growing on her tongue and back and was confined to a sanitarium for weeks.

MARRIES IN FACE OF LIFE SENTENCE

Slayer Redresses Wrong to Former Mistress.

Buenos Aires.—Facing a life sentence for the murder and dismembering of his beautiful sweetheart, Virginia Donatelli, the young Argentine slayer, Julio Americo Bonini, has been married in jail to Maria Luisa Monea, a former object of his affection with whom he had lived up to his meeting with the Donatelli girl.

So great was the popular interest created by the finding, in the muddy backwaters of La Plata river of first, the torso, then the limbs and later and at a distant point the head of Virginia Donatelli, that a movement has gained headway with the press and the public for the restoration of the death penalty for murder which had long ago been abolished.

Young Bonini's action in embracing religion, in confessing his sins and in volunteering to marry the Monea girl not only has stemmed the tide of popular revulsion against him, but has gained for him an increasing number of friends who seek to find mitigating circumstances for his act in slaying the girl that he now avers won him away from the bride of his recent marriage.

Entire pages have been devoted by the Buenos Aires newspapers to the crime. The papers point to the irony of the Argentine marriage law which declares that "the woman has the obligation to live under the same roof with her spouse; and should she not do so, this may be demanded of her by statute."

Good Samaritan Saves Squirrel but Finds Woe

St. Louis, Mo.—As often is the case, William Hoffman's daily good deed netted him only grief.

Bill is a butcher and he was diligently wielding his cleaver when he noticed a squirrel peeking in the window of his shop. He dropped his cleaver and went in pursuit of the little animal.

Over eight fences went the squirrel and over eight fences went Bill. He picked up some clods of dirt to throw at the animal and aroused the ire of neighboring housewives when his clods soiled the weekly wash.

When the squirrel entangled itself in some chicken wire Bill was the recipient of deep scratches as he removed the animal. He took the squirrel home, where it escaped and hid in a hole in the ceiling. Bill had his face scratched and his nose bitten when he peered in the hole.

Hoffman attached a hose to the gas stove and turned the gas into the hole in the ceiling. In a few minutes the squirrel dropped to the floor and was put in a box.

Fresh air and the animal was soon revived.

And then Bill and the squirrel went for a ride in Bill's car, a ride which took them to Tower Grove park, where the butcher released the animal, which scampered for a tree, perched on a high limb, and chattered insultingly at Bill.

But Bill refused to draw a moral from the story and is satisfied that he saved the little animal from the perils of the city's streets.

"Corpse" Comes to Life When Police Show Up

Racine, Wis.—A "corpse" came to life here while Racine police were carrying the supposedly dead man in a bathtub to the station. A telephone call had requested the officers to call for the body of a man discovered in the tub, which was part of an apartment building that was being wrecked.

The police arrived, picked up the tub, and started to an ambulance when a startled man arose from the improvised stretcher and asked what it all was about.

His presence, he explained, was due to a tired feeling after an all-night party. He was employed at the wrecking job and desired to be on time in the morning; hence the use of the tub as a bed.

Woman Takes $5 Bill From Plate in Church

Fresno, Calif.—The collection plate came along in church and Mrs. Sophia Gleim took out a $5 bill.

In police court she admitted she took the money.

"It wasn't stealing," she said. "People saw me. I was going to pay the money back and $1 extra. I needed it, for my husband has been gone for two years and there are bills to pay."

She was given a suspended jail sentence, on condition that she pay back the money.

"Please make Father change his smoking tobacco"

MEN go to their graves ignorant of the suffering an over-strong pipe has caused others. But now, we trust, Father will lose no time in discovering Sir Walter Raleigh, whose mild, fragrant blend is as popular with the smoked-at, as it is delightful to the smoker. This blend of choice Burleys has plenty of body and a very special fragrance. Yet it's so mild you can smoke it all day long, with only the sensation of increasing enjoyment.

Catalogue houses are making a big fuss over their new policy of paying the freight, express or postage. Local merchants have been doing this for years and have had their merchandise on the shelves and counters where the buyers could examine it and pass on the quality before they buy. In addition, they have helped keep up our schools, churches, streets and roads and have many times helped a deserving customer over a tight pinch by extending him credit. Show us a mail order house that can equal that service asks the Dassel Dispatch.

We sometimes wonder whether riches are really worth striving for. In one Multi-millionaire family, the father stands convicted of a statutory charge against a young girl and the mother faces sentence for manslaughter for killing a man with her automobile. Certainly wealth has been no blessing to them, but a curse of the deepest dye. It is far more satisfying to be poor and honorable.—St. Peter Herald.

THE BANK'S PART IN THE FARM PROBLEM

By H. LANE YOUNG

Member American Bankers Association Agricultural Commission

H. Lane Young

ONE of the most discussed and least understood questions regarding the farmer's problems is the part the bank has played, or is to play, in financing the farmer. The basis of co-operation between the two, however, is a very simple one.

Both sides are subject to criticism for the condition that exists today. The major share of the blame rests on those banks that have failed through disregarding fundamental principles in loaning other people's money, that have encouraged the farmer to expect bank loans without first putting his business on the earning basis which would justify a bank to lend him money.

One of the underlying reasons for the failure of so many country banks has been the existence of too many banks. With the limited business of the community divided among too many banks it was impossible for them to make enough money to justify the employment of officers with the proper ability to manage the bank successfully. Then the scramble for business was so hard that good judgment and foresight were forgotten in granting loans, with the resultant failure of the weaker institutions.

In the future, banks are not going to loan the money of their depositors without the kind of security that can be immediately realized upon in case the loan is not paid, or unless the applicant presents a sound and successful record of business operation—whether that business be manufacturing, merchandising, or farming.

Farming-Banking Interdependent

This is a perfectly obvious attitude, because country banking cannot be successfully and profitably carried on unless farming is successfully and profitably operated—the two businesses are dependent upon each other. There is no longer any question that the time has arrived for these interdependent businesses to reach a common ground of understanding of the requirements that both must meet for their mutual welfare.

There is no doubt but what the future prosperity of the farmer and the basis of cooperation between banker and farmer is the intelligent diversification of crops. It is necessary, however, to have the right conception of diversification.

The mistake that many farmers have made in attempting to diversify has been to invest too much money, time and land in a new and untried crop—sometimes a hazardous crop, or one for which no immediate market has been developed, resulting in a loss of the initial effort and discouragement of future efforts on a more conservative basis.

Disregarding the primary and essential principle of farming—namely, increasing earnings by decreasing the cost of production through the practice of building up soil by crop rotation and intensive cultivation, is responsible for a large share of the farmers' trouble today.

As An Agriculturalist Sees Farm Board's Job

The new Agricultural Marketing Act approaches farm relief from a materially different point of view from that of former bills before Congress in recent years, says Dean H. L. Russell of Wisconsin University College of Agriculture in the American Bankers Association Journal.

"It contains a new idea, fraught with the greatest possibilities—the organization of a Federal Farm Board," he says. "It has been possible for farm cooperatives to borrow from Federal-aided institutions before, and at a materially lower rate than city business men had to pay for working capital, but this is the first set-up made by the government in which a commission has been carefully chosen to give undivided attention to an effort to solve the problems of a farm group.

"It is hard to conceive of a higher degree of responsibility than must be assumed by this commission. No board ever created by congressional action has been clothed with as wide plenary powers. It is authorized not only to advise but to execute, to plan and put its plans into effective action, to buy and hold, to dump, to dip into the Federal treasury, to accomplish its ends with what would be almost unlimited resources to any private commercial concern. The board's only job is to succeed, and no governmental agency even during the war time emergency had a wider latitude.

"Many will think the farm relief program will be universally applicable to the individual land owner or operator. Such procedure is far from the case. Aid is to be extended through cooperative organizations by making it possible for such groups to obtain cash advances to hold crops so as to permit of more orderly marketing.

"While the primary relation is with cooperatives, the individual or unorganized farmer will also profit by the activities of his organized fellows. If a stabilized program of merchandising is able to eliminate the surpluses that exert such depressing influence on prices the general price relation should be improved. If this occurs the individual farmer should also benefit.

"It is here the government is proposing a novel attempt in economics. Through stabilization corporations for each commodity it is proposed to make possible the handling of the surplus so as to lessen its disturbing influence on prices. With non-perishable products such a program is, of course, conceivably possible, but one wonders what would happen if a stabilization corporation had to handle a perishable crop in great quantities.

"Is it going to be possible for a stabilization corporation to stabilize? It would be one thing if it had merely to stabilize the American situation, but often that situation is complicated with world conditions. Perhaps the very fact that such a stabilization corporation is in position to function may have a steadying effect on the market.

"Markets respond to psychological stimuli as do individuals. The very fact that the government has now definitely stepped into the breach with all of its resources available to make the new plan work will exert undoubtedly a strong stabilizing effect.

"It would be presumptuous to forecast what the ultimate effect of the new act will be. It can, however, be definitely stated that in the present plan much of the philosophy that had been so drastically criticized as economically unsound has been eliminated. The existing plan is worth trying. It will undoubtedly cost the Federal treasury no inconsiderable amounts of money, but if it produces the hoped-for result it will have been well worth while."

BANKING FINDS THE WAY TO SAFER ERA

By FRANK W. SIMMONDS, American Bankers Association

In considering the banking situation throughout the country, the fact should be kept in mind that while one bank in ten failed during the past eight years, it is far more important that nine banks out of ten, operating in the same general field, serving the same communities and meeting almost identically the same problems, weathered the economic storm of readjustment successfully. This achievement cannot be ascribed to any element of luck, but rather to consistent adherence to sound banking principles and profitable practices. Through worthy and efficient management they met the issues and problems confronting them, squarely and successfully.

Banking is regarded as the keystone of our entire business structure, hence bank failures are rightly regarded as intolerable public calamities that must absolutely be prevented. The three major objectives of all inter-bank organizations, whether local, county, district, state or national, are to make banking safer for all concerned and, through increased efficiency in bank management and supervision, to lessen or eliminate all forms of losses so that greater rewards may accrue to banking and better service to the public. There is definite evidence throughout the country of a strong and growing spirit of cooperation among bankers and banking organizations, which is resulting more and more in strengthening the work of all.

Clearinghouse associations among banks in city, county or district groups undoubtedly constitute the chief line of defense against bad banking practices. They have demonstrated that they are the principal factor in bringing about reformation in banking regulations, improvements in banking methods and the observance of sound banking principles. For many years the primary purpose of a clearinghouse association was the clearance of checks, but today it is the clearance of banking ideas and the solution of banking problems. Clearinghouses supply the local machinery essential for setting up and putting in practice necessary standards and uniformities. There are now 435 clearinghouse associations in cities, towns, counties and groups of counties in the United States.

Men today are more intelligently group-minded than ever before. Banking is combining the best elements of competition with sound group action. By virtue of this combination, individual thought has much wider possibilities of expression. In general, group action has not stifled but has stimulated individual thinking and initiative. Better inter-bank organization and relationships afforded by clearinghouses would have undoubtedly saved many institutions that have suffered failure in the past. The clearinghouse activities of the American Bankers Association are conducted for the purpose of encouraging ever widening cooperation along fundamental principles and practices among banks through clearinghouse associations. Bankers in every city, county or district can, through the agency of a clearinghouse, promote better, safer and more profitable banking and also serve their communities better.

There never was a time when successful bankers were so alert to the value of team work for putting the entire banking structure in prime condition. Sound bank management is the order of the day. Constructive cooperation is more than a sentiment, it is an economic necessity, a matter of enlightened self-interest, and successful bankers more and more are utilizing the agency of constructive group action in developing and establishing necessary standards and uniformities in banking practices. Each year banking is becoming more of a science and attaining higher professional standards.

Bayer Tablets Aspirin

Needless Pain!

Nowadays, people take Bayer Aspirin for many little aches and pains, and as often as they encounter any pain.

Why not? It is a proven antidote for pain. It works!

And Bayer Aspirin tablets are utterly harmless. You have the medical profession's word for that; they do not depress the heart.

So, don't let a cold "run its course." Don't wait for a headache to "wear off." Or regard neuralgia, neuritis, or even rheumatism as something you must endure. Only a physician can cope with the cause of such pain, but you can always turn to Bayer Aspirin for relief.

Bayer Aspirin is always available, and it always helps. Familiarize yourself with its many uses, and avoid a lot of needless suffering.

When Babies FRET

There are times when a baby is too fretful or feverish to be sung to sleep. There are some pains a mother cannot pat away. But there's no time when any baby can't have the quick comfort of Castoria! A few drops, and your little one is soon at ease—back to sleep almost before you can slip away.

Remember this harmless, pure vegetable preparation when children are ailing. Don't stop its use when Baby has been brought safely through the age of colic, diarrhea, and other infantile ills. Give good old Castoria until your children are in their teens! Whenever coated tongues tell of constipation; whenever there's any sign of sluggishness that needs no stronger medicines to relieve. Castoria is pleasant-tasting; children love to take it. Buy the genuine—with Chas. H. Fletcher's signature on wrapper.

Home Has More Danger Than Savages of Brazil

JOHN J. WHITEHEAD, explorer and lecturer, has just returned from eight months in the jungles of South America, where he was searching for traces of the lost Colonel Fawcett and his son.

Dangerous as he found the jungle, he encountered a worse danger at home. But let him tell it.

"One of the great problems of a trip of this kind is keeping in healthy condition. When we started, some of the members of the party had laxatives with them, but made wise by experience I carried Nujol. All too quickly my stock ran out. Soon I was in bad shape—what with a diet of rice and beans, lacking vitamins and green vegetables.

"When we finally got back to civilization, entertained first in Brazil and later in the United States, I became positively ill. Severe stomach pains and poor elimination made me realize that Nujol would again prove the reliable, trusty keeper of health. Sure enough, with the first bottle the trouble disappeared.

Don't think Nujol is a medicine. It is as tasteless and colorless as clear water. It brings you, however, what your body needs like any other machine—lubrication. Just as a good bath washes our bodies clean, Nujol sweeps away, easily and normally, those internal bodily poisons (we all have them) that make us feel dull and headachy and sick. Nujol cannot hurt even a little baby; it forms no habit; it contains not one single drug. Doctors and nurses use it themselves and tell you to use it, if you want to be well.

Take Nujol every night for two weeks and prove to yourself how happy and bright and full of pep you can be, if your body is internally clean. Get a bottle today at any drug store. It costs but a few cents, and makes you feel like a million dollars. Start traveling the health-road to success and happiness—this very day!

Keeping the American Home Alive

—By—
BETTY CROCKER

I WISH some of the dreary misanthropists, who say that homes are a thing of the past because the modern family never stays home any more, could read some of the thousands of letters I receive every week from my radio friends and cooking school pupils. These letters are written by women living in cities, towns and villages, and on farms and ranches all the way from the Atlantic to the Pacific and from the Gulf of Mexico to the Great Lakes.

A clever mathematician, I am sure, would be able to discover that since I began broadcasting the first women's service program over the radio back in 1924 I have received enough letters from American housewives to reach around the world several times. These letters give me a very definite picture of the women who write them and their homes. In fact I like to think of them as pass keys which enable me to enter these homes and, unseen by the family, watch and hear what is going on.

It would be fun to rent the magic carpet from a certain band of radio singers and take these false prophets, who are dismally sounding the death knell of the American home, on a tour of the country—silently unlocking doors and bidding them enter with me.

These pessimistic souls would be shocked to discover that for every household of jazz hounds there are thousands of happy homes where father, mother, boys and girls gather 'round the supper or dinner table every night for a pleasant, cozy meal together, and that after dinner at least half the family remain home listening to the radio, reading, or discussing their affairs together.

I would like to call attention to the food on the dinner table, too, for instead of an ill-chosen assortment that mother had grabbed up at the corner delicatessen as she rushed home from her bridge club, we behold home-cooked foods—a delicious stew, perhaps, with tasty vegetables or a salad, bread and butter with home-made jam, and a dessert of pie or cake that mother baked herself.

Not only will these cynics see these modern women actually getting breakfast, dinner and luncheon or supper, but they will discover that they are deeply interested in making their meals wholesome and attractive. They would find out, furthermore, that these women do not look upon their job of getting three meals a day, 365 days in the year, as drab, monotonous drudgery; for they realize that the physical—and even to some extent the spiritual—well-being of their families depend on the kind of meals they eat and the regularity with which they are served.

A Jolt for the Gloomy.

My gloomy friends would have another jolt, too, for these happy interested women who believe that home-making is one of the noblest professions in the world are not just the women living in isolated rural communities where the spirit of the jazz age has not penetrated, but in the congested apartment house districts of large cities there really are more of them than of the other kind who neglect their homes and their children for the movies, bridge or golf.

Here is a letter that takes us into a tiny apartment in a big seaport city. The father is a sailor and away at sea most of the time—so this woman does not have to plan meals that will appeal to a man. She has three small children and herself only to consider. She wants to give them the food that will help them to grow up strong and sturdy, and she realizes that she must keep well and healthy herself to care for them properly. Here is her problem, the foods she gives them are not those she enjoys. She says she cannot eat "baby food" and asks me to suggest menus that will be suitable for the children and herself.

The next letter takes us to a comfortable roomy farmhouse in Ohio. A young woman home from college is planning the silver wedding celebration for her father and mother. Friends and relatives are coming from distant states and she wants to make the occasion a remembered one. She is asking me for a recipe for a huge cake and suggestions for decorating it appropriately.

Our magic carpet next takes us to a newly furnished apartment in a big, hustling Mid-Western city. The young bride is so proud of her immaculate little kitchen with all its shining new equipment. She says she wants to learn how to make her husband's favorite dessert—pumpkin pie—and she is determined that her pie crust shall be just as tender and flaky as his mother used to make for him.

From this tall apartment building we are whisked away across the prairies and mountains to a California fruit ranch where there is another bride interested in learning to bake. She wants to make bread, if you please; and she tells us in glowing words how she loves her new little home up in the hills. She would not be back in the city clicking a typewriter for anything in the world—but there are so many, many things she needs to learn about cooking. She has registered for my radio cooking school and twice a week she "attends class" sitting in her living room making notes of the suggestions that come over the radio and taking down my recipes.

The New Home-Maker.

I do not believe there is anything makes me more happy than a letter from one of these new home-makers telling me how interested she is in preparing attractive meals for her young husband.

Is it any wonder that I work hard to give them recipes that not only are correctly proportioned, but that are so clearly and definitely stated that they cannot go wrong with them? I am hoping that such recipes will prevent the old joke about bride's biscuits from being realistic—and not amusing realities. Instead, I want the first attempt at baking with my repices to result in biscuits so light and tender that the young husband will be fairly bursting with pride over his bride's skill in baking.

Times have changed since the days when girls stayed at home and learned to cook by helping their mothers with the baking. When those girls went into homes of their own they usually were skillful cooks. They knew by looking at their cake batter whether it was just right or not—and they could tell by the "feel" of their bread dough when they had added enough flour. Recipes which said "flour to make a stiff dough" or just "flour" were perfectly satisfactory to them—but to the bride of today such recipes are Greek. She needs very explicit directions about measurements and amounts. Therefore that is one of the reasons why making my recipes so definite that no one can be in doubt about them is a hobby of mine.

However, it is not the new home-makers alone who tell me that they find my recipes and radio cooking school lessons a help. Let us travel back across the mountains on our magic carpet to the prairies. Here in a spacious pleasant home in a Kansas city we meet a woman who is radiantly happy because the devils food cake she made with one of my recipes brought her the first prize at a county fair. She has been keeping house for ten or twelve years, but this is the first time she has ever won a prize for skill in baking.

In a New Jersey city we visit a women who tells us she is a grandmother, and that her children and grandchildren consider her the world's best cook. Nevertheless she has enrolled in my cooking school over the air because she wants to keep up with new methods and ideas in baking.

Learn Over the Radio.

A young home-maker in Georgia wants to learn how to make doughnuts. Hers, she says, are "like brickbats."

In a Texas city, a mother and daughter are "attending class" over the radio together. They are interested in learning about some new dainties to serve when they entertain their bridge clubs. I hope my cynical friends will observe that although these women do enjoy playing bridge, they can also cook, and they want to entertain their bridge friends at home and serve them with home-cooked foods.

From up on the Iron Range in northern Minnesota comes a letter from a young woman who says she has just started housekeeping and her family must include relatives of her husband's, making a household of six—four adults and two children. She knows how to cook a few things well—but they are so very few that she fears her meals will become monotonous. She hopes to get many suggestions and new recipes from my radio talks that will help her. Right now she is especially anxious to be able to make good chocolate cake.

These are only a few of the homes represented by the pile of letters right here on my desk, but they are representative of the letters I read last week and last year, and of those I undoubtedly shall read next week and the weeks that follow. Gay letters, pathetic letters, discouraged letters and brave letters from women in every part of the country who are deeply interested in keeping happy, well-ordered homes for their families.

Surely these letters are a powerful challenge to Mr. and Miss Cynic who say that the American home is a thing of the past because the modern woman is not interested in home things. They also give me a very definite idea of the problems the housewife of today is facing and the kind of cooking information she seeks. It is because of the many, many requests I have had from them for menu suggestions that I am devoting one of my two radio talks each week to the principles of menu building and meal planning. In the radio cooking school lessons which I give in my other weekly talks I am trying to answer the questions I am asked most often about making bread, cakes, pies, biscuits and cookies. With each lesson I shall give a recipe which I hope my radio friends will feel is practical and the kind of thing their families will enjoy.

To me it is a wonderful privilege to be able to be of any service, however slight, to these hundreds of thousands of American women, who quietly and unnoticed are keeping the American home an alive and nourishing institution.

Lower Forms of Life Sacred to Egyptians

Nearly 100 different mammals, birds, reptiles and fish were regarded as sacred to various gods in ancient Egypt, and their bodies were mummified by thousands, Prof. Roy L. Moodie has found while investigating this subject for the Field museum of Chicago. The cost of this religious procedure was enormous. More than 200 yards of fine linen cloth, a half yard wide, was needed for the wrapping of a single bull. As bulls were held in extreme veneration by the ancient Egyptians, great numbers of them were preserved. Expensive sarcophagi, carvings and statuary show the further care of the African bull. Birds of the hawk and falcon type were also abundantly preserved, as was the Egyptian kite, a small scavenger seen today perched on housetops and in trees near villages. Packages contain as many as forty birds, each mummified and dipped in pitch before wrapping.

Association Held Annual Meeting

The members of the Holt Cooperative Livestock Shipping Association held their annual meeting in the Community Hall on Monday afternoon with all the officers present. John Benitt and Harvey Copp were re-elected as directors of the board. The other directors are: Olaf Dahl, F. D. Voth, and C. A. Davis.

Hilmer Moberg, who is manager for the association here, read the reports for the year and they were approved by the members of the boaad, who expressed much satisfaction with the business which had been done thru the local association the past fiscal year, which has one month to go.

So far this year they have shipped 31 carloads of stock.consisting of: 821 cattle, 223 hogs, and 1212 sheep. This has brought the farmers of this community a net return of $43.632.33.

The association shipped four carloads more this year than they did in 1928.

Hockey Game

The Strathcona Puck Pushers motored down here on Sunday for a game of Hockey with the local boys. A very good game was played. At times it was air-tight, as both teams were holding the puck away from the goal.

At the close of the game the score was 2 and 2. The boys decided to have it break either way so they tore into a fast play for an extra frame, but when the time was called it was still a tie with one score for each side in the extra time, making a 3 and 3 score tie game. The local team will go to Strathcona on Sunday Feb. 9th for a game.

Soap Lake

FOR years past, it seems, various tribes of Indians in our great Northwest country have been familiar with the curative properties of Great Spirit (Smokiam) lake and regularly made pilgrimages thereto for the purpose of drinking its antiseptic waters and sweating away their aches and pains in the mud baths—Smokiam being Indian for "Healing Salts."

Superstitious members of the tribes are said to have regarded it as a "witch doctor" sent by the "Great Spirit." The white man called it Soap lake, because its waters are strongly alkaline and soapy to the touch.

It is located in the great central portion of the great state of Washington, in what is known locally as the Columbia Basin country, and regarded as one of the most remarkable medicinal lakes in this or any other country. It occupies a deep basin, more or less walled in by basaltic cliffs, is two miles long, almost a mile wide and varies from 40 to 125 feet in depth. Its waters are as clear as crystal, unusually buoyant and, it is said, no stream flows into or out of it.

No fish live or vegetation grows in it. Government analysis shows the water to contain silica, sodium sulphate, chloride and carbonate, borax, ammonium and iron oxide, magnesium sulphate, potassium carbonate, phosphorus and iodine. This great, natural healing fount has been found to be particularly beneficial in the treatment of numerous ailments which beset the human race.

School Notes

High School

Friday night, January 24th the High School gave a radio party. Mr. and Mrs. Fricker, and Mrs. Anton were invited. We had a very good time and a delicious lunch.

Mr. Vieths, Mr. Overum, Miss Torblaa, and Miss Rognlie are going to the Sunny Side schoolhouse Saturday February 1st, to judge a Spelling Contest.

Last Monday morning Mr. Vieths spoke to the High School on "The Value of An Education." We all realize how important it is to have a good education.

The high school will make use of the opportunity of skating, during physical education period, whenever the weather is satisfactory.

WANTED:

Oscar Fosholm—hair dresser

Richard Michaelson —new author for the modern history book.

Oscar Nohre—music teacher during Junior Business Training

Alice Hall—more time for studying

Julius Faiman—permission to talk during school hours

Ethel Johnson—more magazines

Seventh and Eighth Grades

The seventh and eighth grade boys have been practicing hockey. They hope that they will beat the High School boys. They have extended their noon hour fifteen minutes and are omitting their afternoon recesses.

Until recently the pupils have decided on their own seating but Mr Overum has changed their places; now it is not so easy to whisper to each other.

Fifth and Sixth Grades

Mrs. Geo. Fricker substituted as teacher Thursday and Friday last week during Miss Rognlie's absence.

The fifth and sixth graders have started a spelling race. The grades are represented by cars. The fifth grade is represented by a Ford and the sixth is represented by a Willys-Knight. The cars travel a hundred miles a day.

Third and Fourth Grades

The Reading Club met on January 24th and admitted Opal Werner as a member.

The club gave a play entitled "Hansel and Gretel". It was very interesting and very successful.

The pupils have become poets and have showed their talent by writing poems.

WINTER

Winter has come, and I am so glad,
But some are very sad,
Some wish summer was near,
But I am glad winter is here.

—Lucille Horien, 3d grade

THE MERRY CLOCK

Tick! Tock! Tick! Tock!
I hear the voice of the merry clock.
When I am very very sick,
I hear its voice go, Tick! Tick! Tick!

—Beatrice Larson, 4th grade

First and Second Grades

Jean Sorum has left the first grade.

All the second grade boys have just completed the bird sticks. The boys in first grade will finish the board pictures this week.

The first and second grade girls have been making doll rugs.

Final announcements regarding the Northwest School Farmers' Week and the Red River Valley Winter Shows will be made over Station CKY, up at Winnipeg, by A. A. Dowell, Superintendent of the Northwest School, from 1:15 to 1:25 p. m. on Wednesday, February 5. On that day Mr. Dowell will address the Western Canada Dairy Convention on the subject "Dairying in the Northwest."

Farm Board Approves Loan

The Federal Farm Board today announced that it has approved an application of the Land O' Lakes Creameries, Inc., Minneapolis, Minn., for a loan of even $1,000,000 to assist that cooperative association in the effective merchandising of dairy products handled by it.

The board approved a second application by the Land O' Lakes Creameries, Inc., for a line of credit not exceeding $2,000,000, supplemental to primary loans from other sources, to enable the association to advance to its members a greater share of the market price of the dairy products delivered by them to the association.

Church Council Held Meeting

The members of the Nazareth Lutheran Church Council and their wives met at the home of Rev. and Mrs. L. M. Redal on Monday evening.

During the business session of the council they elected Miss Viola Torblaa, one of the high school teachers, as Superintendent of the Sunday School. Mrs. Alfred Anderson was elected as vice-superintendent.

Ludwig Sagstuen and family of Viking were visitors here on Monday.

Burnquist Files For Governor

J. A. A. Burnquist, Governor of Minnesota from 1915 to 1921, filed for the Republican nomination to that office Saturday with Mike Holm, secretary of state. Mr. Burnquist is the first gubernatorial candidate to file.

"For many months I have been mentiond as a possible candidate," said Burnquist. "I have felt that I should defer making any decision until a sufficient time had elasped for developement of public sentiment. In reponse to expressions that have come to me, I have filed for the Republican nomination for Governor."

SHORT LESSONS IN DAIRYING

LESSON 88

PRODUCTION: For a cow weighing a thousand pounds and producing 25 lbs. of milk a day testing 4 per ct, or 30 lbs. testing 3.5 per ct, or 20 lbs testing 5 per ct, the amt of milk required for 1 lb of butterfat at these different tests, the following rations will suffice: (1) Clover hay, 20 lbs.; ground oats, barley, and corn in equal parts, 8 lbs ; or (2) Alfalfa hay, 10 lbs.; fodder corn, 15 lbs.; grain same as in (1); (3) Alfalfa hay, 10 lbs.; corn silage, 30 lbs.; and grain same as in(1). With such hay as timothy or wild hay, or corn stover, all low in milk-producing substance, 2 lbs. of bran and 1 lb. of oilmeal or some other mill feed high in protein, should be added to the grain ration given in (1).

MANUFACTURING: A tariff may be desirable and necessary, but it will not take the place of improved methods. While tariff has been of much assistance to dairying, Land O'Lakes Creameries has not forgotten the importance of new and better methods of manufacturing and marketing.

MARKETING: It has been said that "The man who is through changing is through." Perhaps one of the troubles with agriculture is that the system of marketing farm products was not changed until many farmers "were through," and many banks depending on farmers "were through." Co-operative marketing is a change in selling to meet a change in buying. Chain stores buy for as many as ten thousand stores through one buyer. Why should not many creameries sell their butter through one seller?

Clean Kidneys By Drinking Lots of Water

Take Salts to Flush Kidneys if Bladder Bothers or Back Hurts

Eating too much rich food may produce kidney trouble in some form, says a well-known authority, because the acids created excite the kidneys. Then they become overworked, get sluggish, clog up and cause all sorts of distress, particularly backache and misery in the kidney region, rheumatic twinges, severe headaches, acid stomach, constipation, torpid liver, sleeplessness, bladder and urinary irritation.

The moment your back hurts or kidneys aren't acting right, or if bladder bothers you, begin drinking lots of good water and also get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any good pharmacy; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys may then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for years to flush clogged kidneys and stimulate them to activity; also to neutralize the acids in the system so that they no longer irritate, thus often relieving bladder disorders.

Jad Salts cannot injure anyone; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which millions of men and women take now and then to help keep the kidneys and urinary organs clean, thus often avoiding serious kidney disorders.

Deserved Leniency

In traffic court at Fort Worth, Texas, an elderly woman who had a "ticket" bestowed on her for failing to observe a boulevard stop sign, told the judge that the city street department's activities in the vicinity of her arrest had made the thoroughfare so bumpy that her glasses were shaken off and she could not see the "Stop" sign. "Case dismissed," said the judge; "that's a new excuse, and I always dismiss for new excuses."

LIGHTS of NEW YORK

By GRANT DIXON

Rewards

Recently I read that a Chicago gunman has been linked with so many murders that rewards for his capture total $100,000. There are probably hundreds of detectives who make a profession of going after reward cases who are now on his trail. But some one else may capture him—a traffic policeman might arrest him for speeding, for example. And if this happens and the traffic policeman doesn't know about the rewards, he is out of luck. He might hear about the prize afterward, but in most states he could not bring suit to get the money. Not long ago in New York a taxicab chauffeur found what he thought was a string of imitation pearls. As a matter of routine he turned the pearls over to his employers, and they found the owner. The string was worth $50,000, and a reward of $5,000 had been posted. Since the chauffeur made no claim at the time he turned them in, he had no legal right to the $5,000. But the overjoyed owner gave it to him anyway.

Exit Shoestringers

The Wall Street crash accomplished one good thing at any rate. It drove to cover dozens of shoestring theatrical producers. These gentlemen, for the most part inexpert in the ways of the stage, rely upon "angels" to put up the money for their ventures. They are called shoestringers, but often they spend huge amounts of some one else's money. In the old days a cloak-and-suiter felt rich enough to take a flier at the stage. But now he has retrenched, and Broadway is slightly safer for the real producers. But only slightly. It's an off season, and many real producers are taking vacations.

Wisecrack

There is, as is usual each season, one of those half-whimsical, half-dramatic A. A. Milne plays at the tiny Charles Hopkins theater. This time it is about two very nice people, one of whom commits bigamy. All Milne people are very nice, from Winnie the Pooh on up, and the bigamy in this case is quite the right thing to do. But I am digressing. What I wanted to tell about is a line that amused me. Edith Barrett, the wife, is trying to get the attention of Henry Hull, the husband, who is reading a book. Finally she asks:

"Is that one of those books that, once you have picked it up, you cannot put it down?"

"No," replied Hull, "it is one of those books you cannot pick up, once you have put it down."

Wrong Book

The new Theatre Guild play, "Meteor," tried out in Boston recently, with Alfred Lunt and Lynn Fontanne in the principal roles. The business of the play calls for the use of a first edition of a very rare old book. To get a copy was out of the question, so another very old book was used. One day the company received a package and a letter from a Boston bookseller. The letter explained that the writer had seen the play, and had noted that the book being used did not look like the first edition of the work it was supposed to be. "It is the wrong size," he wrote. "I am sending you another old book whose general appearance and size are closer to the original."

New Poor

The recent stock market crash has put on the lists of charity organizations persons who never before had dreamed that they might be objects of charity. But a wrong slant on the situation might be got from a cartoon I saw recently, depicting a man accepting alms from a woman. "Poor fellow," said the benefactress. "Stock market, I suppose?" "No," replied the object of charity, "I was always a bum." The persons who are now asking for help are not investors and former big men of Wall Street, but such folk as artists who have lost their commissions, servants who have been let out, tutors and music teachers and the like. The family that has suffered in Wall Street goes on an economy program, and the retrenchment affects the hirelings.

Spare Parts for Dogs

London.—The days when faithful dog friends, overtaken by infirmity, had to be taken to execution, have passed, according to the organizers of the National Dog show here. They state that dogs can now be fitted with artificial limbs, glass eyes and false teeth.

Baby Drowns Sailing Toy Boat in Bathtub

Washington. — Seventeen-month-old Frank Edward Donelan's desire for more water in the bathtub in which to float his miniature sailboat caused his death. The child was found submerged in nearly a foot of water by his mother, Mrs. Melba B. Donelan, after sounds of the baby's play had ceased. The fire department rescue squad and emergency hospital physicians worked over the body for nearly an hour before Dr M. L. Helges pronounced the child dead.

NABBED FOR MURDER AFTER 4-YEAR HUNT

Cappello Accused of Wanton Killing in Holdup.

Cambridge, Mass.—After more than four years of searching the law has reached out and fallen heavily on the shoulder of Jerry Cappello, twenty-four, of East Boston, charged with the murder of Edward C. Ross, bank messenger, at the Ward Baking company plant here in 1925.

Cappello is charged with first degree murder, for the same crime for which Jerry Gedzium, "Jerry the Pole," was electrocuted on February 28, 1928. A third man arrested in the case, Louis Lacedra, was released because of insufficient evidence.

Cappello's arrest was due to the alertness of Patrolmen Hannebury and Louisinki, who took him into custody in front of his home.

For four years the Cambridge police have been searching for Cappello, making several trips to Maine, New Hampshire and Vermont on the case during the last four years.

Engaged in Rum Running.

It was known in police circles that Cappello was running liquor from Canada, a fact which he admitted when arrested, and several traps were set in tiny towns near the Canadian border.

At one time, about a year ago, police lying in ambush nearly arrested Cappello at Newport, Vt., but he got away. During the last four years he has shown an uncanny knowledge of where police traps were set and circled around them.

At intervals he would make visits to East Boston haunts, where he was a familiar figure before the Cambridge murder. The police, knowing of these visits, but never being able to be at the right place at the right time, were outwitted until Cappello walked into the trap.

Cold Blooded Killing.

The murder of the bank messenger and theft of the $10,000 pay roll in front of the Ward Baking company on Albany street, was one of a long series of similar crimes that terrorized Cambridge during 1924 and 1925.

It was a needless and particularly coldblooded killing. Ross was at the wheel of the bank car as it drew up in front of the baking company with the weekly pay roll.

As it stopped three men stepped up with leveled guns snarling, "Put 'em up! Put 'em up!" As they spoke they opened fire and young Ross crumpled over the wheel with a bullet in his head and another in his lung.

The bandits ran to a fast car and sped away with the pay roll, amounting to $10,275.24, which they had wrenched from Rufus A. Johnson and William H. O'Toole, bank guards.

The bandits made a clean getaway, but several witnesses got a good look at them before they disappeared. It was on the testimony of those witnesses that Jerry Gedzium, known as Jerry the Pole, was later sent to the electric chair.

Canada Leads World in Production of Nickel

Ottawa, Ont.—Canada is the "little giant" among the world's producing nations.

Although possessing only about one-half of one per cent of the world's population, the Dominion produces many important commodities in large quantities.

Canada produces 90 per cent of the world's nickel supply and 15 per cent of the world's wood pulp. Canada gives the world about 10 per cent of its oats, 9 per cent of its wheat, and nearly 10 per cent of its gold and silver.

More than 16 per cent of the world's known coal resources are located in Canada. It has greater asbestos and nickel deposits than any other country in the world, and ranks third in the production of gold. The Dominion ranks eighth among the countries of the world as a producer of cheese and fifth as a producer of butter.

Game Wardens Puzzled, Bird Flies to Doom

Provo, Utah.—Going out and stalking the elusive pheasant is one way of obtaining a meal; sitting in your kitchen and waiting for a bird to fly in your window is another, Mrs. H. S. Pyne believes the watchful waiting act is more comfortable if not just as sure as the stalking.

She had hunted pheasants a few times, but without any luck. She sat in her kitchen and a beautiful big male bird crashed through the window and landed at her feet. She picked up the bird, plucked it and cooked it.

Game wardens were at a loss how to deal with the case, as the bird was obtained out of season. None of the state laws, however, provide for the treatment of birds who crash through one's window

Man Carries Piece of Wire in Eye for 10 Years

Lewiston, Idaho.—An operation under the right eyeball of Frank Horak, disclosed a bit of wire that had been embedded there for ten years. Horak lost the sight of his right eye when struck by a wire whip ten years ago. He thought the injury had developed a tumor, and recently the spot started paining him. The operation and discovery followed.

TRY TO DISCOVER EFFECT OF RADIUM

Health Bureau Makes Study of Factory Workers.

Washington, D. C.—Studies to determine the effects upon workers of exposure to radium rays have been extended to the Midwest by the United States public health service.

More than 200 women clock factory employees in the vicinity of New York already have been examined by scientific investigators of the service.

Using especially developed apparatus, the investigators have subjected each worker to a searching examination that is expected after X-ray plates have been developed to disclose the slightest trace of radium.

It will require several months, Dr. L. R. Thompson, who is directing the inquiry for the health service, said, to complete study of the plates obtained by the field workers and prepare the results of their study for publication.

The study is the most exhaustive ever undertaken to determine how radium rays affect workers who come into intimate contact with them. Five New Jersey women and a number of workers elsewhere have been stricken after exposure to radium rays in clock factories and several deaths have resulted.

Doctor Thompson explained the health service has decided to expand its inquiry to Illinois in order to obtain data that will be as complete as possible. Results of the survey are expected to be of invaluable aid to science in the future.

Women workers in clock factories whom the investigation discloses to be infected with the penetrating radium rays will be removed to other employment.

Results of the study are expected also to clarify the dispute between scientists over whether radium rays are harmful.

Mexican Slain in Fight Over Fifty Cent Fee

Tia Juana, Mex.—Fifty cents caused the slaying of Francisco Guzman, operator of a picnic park near here, the wounding of his wife and the severe beating of their three-month-old baby.

Two men and an attractive woman started to drive from the park without paying the usual 50 cent fee after being there several hours and drinking a keg of beer.

Guzman and one of the men came to blows in the resulting argument. While they were fighting, the second man shot Guzman to death and wounded his wife in the leg. The baby in Mrs. Guzman's arms was hit several times when the mother tried to force her way between the fighters.

The three, believed to be Americans, escaped over the border into California before the affray became known.

Vigilante Will Permit Robbers to Go Own Way

Fond du Lac, Wis.—The Fond du Lac vigilantes organization which protects banks from roving gangsters is short one member of its original quota.

When roll call was taken at the first mobilization and inspection, the absent member sent the following note to the commanding officer:

"My wife said I should leave guns alone and let bank robbers do their molesting, if any, without interference on my part. Furthermore, the good woman says that the place for a home loving husband is at home, not cavorting around the country looking for these bank robbers."

His resignation was accepted.

Chinese Counterfeiters Caught Making U. S. Coins

Peiping.—The Chinese police have discovered a gang of Chinese counterfeiters here who were engaged in manufacturing American gold coins. Four of the leaders have been arrested, and their apparatus confiscated. The police state that the counterfeit coins were not good enough to deceive Americans, but that a number of them had been passed successfully upon Chinese banks and exchange shops.

Life Insurance Popular

Ottawa, Ont. — Canadians carry more life insurance than any other people in the world with the single exception of residents of the United States. Approximately $650 worth of insurance is carried for every man, woman and child in the Dominion as against $750 per head of population in the United States.

Timber Wolf Becomes Pal of Michigan Man

Traverse City, Mich.—Mark Craw, Traverse City conservation officer, has successfully tamed a young timber wolf.

The wolf, taken by Craw while a pup and nursed from a bottle, answers his master's call like a dog, and follows him about the house. It eats meat from a platter, and is glad to accept the warmth and comfort of a pillow. Also, it is gentle in temperament.

Man has never been fortunate in his experiment with the wolf, and Craw is wondering whether his pet will prove the exception to the rule, or revert to type when it becomes older.

Too Much Emphasis Put On Declaration of Age?

The demand of public officials that the citizen declare his age on every pretext is a piece of obnoxious bureaucracy. You do not need to tell your exact age in order to vote. The women saw to that in short order. But you must tell it in order to obtain a motor vehicle license.

Two million persons in the next few months will need to write down their ages for the perusal of license bureau clerks or any traffic officer. The plea that this is necessary for police purposes is ridiculous. Identification can be made by other means in emergencies. A crook who was trying to "beat" identification would not be greatly distressed by this requirement.

Dr. Charles E. Jefferson of the Broadway Tabernacle church, spoke out two years ago against age requirements on passports, licenses and the like. If more would speak out, a change to a proper basis would be speedy.

Persons might be required to state if they are "of age." But that is sufficient.—New York American.

Mending Fishing Nets Not for Modern Wives

The modern wife is handicapping fishing in the Fife district of Scotland. An unprecedented situation is developing in several fishing towns due to a shortage of women capable of mending the herring nets. The shortage became acute during the preparations for the fishing now in progress at Yarmouth, when great difficulty was experienced in obtaining the necessary assistance to repair the nets. When a well-known Cellardyke fisherman was asked to give a reason for the shortage, his reply was given in three words, "The modern wife!" The young fisher girls have never learned to mend the nets, and consequently the services of the older women, whose numbers are steadily diminishing, are in great demand. Apparently there is no desire among the young wives to learn this duty.

"Lucile is the Happiest Girl"

So many mothers nowadays talk about giving their children fruit juices, as if this were a new discovery. As a matter of fact, for over fifty years, mothers have been accomplishing results far surpassing anything you can secure from home prepared fruit juices, by using pure, wholesome California Fig Syrup, which is prepared under the most exacting laboratory supervision from ripe California Figs, richest of all fruits in laxative and nourishing properties.

It's marvelous to see how bilious, weak, feverish, sallow, constipated, under-nourished children respond to its gentle influence; how their breath clears up, color flames in their cheeks, and they become sturdy, playful, energetic again. A Western mother, Mrs. H. J. Stoll, Valley P. O., Nebraska, says: "My little daughter, Roma Lucile, was constipated from babyhood. I became worried about her and decided to give her some California Fig Syrup. It stopped her constipation quick; and the way it improved her color and made her pick up made me realize how run-down she had been. She is so sturdy and well now, and always in such good humor that neighbors say she's the happiest girl in the West."

Like all good things, California Fig Syrup is imitated, but you can always get the genuine by looking for the name "California" on the carton.

A Sign

Judge Thomas F. Graham, San Francisco's "great reconciler"—he has reconciled hundreds of parted couples—said in an argument about marriage:

"The young are too cynical about marriage. A girl of seventeen or so asked a grass widow of twenty-seven:

"'When a good man makes love to you, is it always a sign that he wants to marry you?"

"'Yes, darling,' laughed the grass widow, 'and when he stops making love to you it is always a sign that the marriage has taken place.'"

Paradise at North Pole

Persistent Eskimo stories of the existence of a tropical paradise near the North pole are about to be investigated by a scientific expedition which will endeavor to locate the spot of it exists. It is said that there is a green valley beyond the Bering strait which is rich with vegetation and the habits of some of the migrating birds indicate that there is a possibility that such places exist.

An aide knocked at the door.

"General Scott is arrived from the Niagara frontier, your excellency," he announced.

"Ah," exclaimed the governor. "In that case, I must ask you to excuse me, gentlemen. But be assured of my sympathy in your undertakings." He hesitated. "My sympathy, gentlemen, and my pity," he added earnestly.

Outside on the steps of the portico, Joshua Inglepin clutched Fellowes' arm again.

"Don't heed the governor's twaddle," he urged in his jerky, impatient speech. "He means well, but he doesn't know. How could he? How could anyone, who hasn't learned to hate? Pah! We'll show 'em, Fellowes. We'll show 'em, damme!"

Fellowes experienced a slight inclination to nausea, and asked himself if Joshua's hysterical assertiveness wasn't perhaps, a reaction from the same cause. He hated, he hated with his whole being. But there was no satisfaction in it, despite Joshua's claim. It was, on the contrary, rather debasing.

* * * * * * *

There was much to be done in fitting the Centurion for sea, but the easiest job of all was collecting a crew. Nimrod Sopher, with Paris Eaches, Joe Doak and a dozen more Babylonians posted into town by Jeff Riggle's coach as soon as the news trickled through the pine forests down the South shore, and were all enrolled in the marine guard, and put to assisting Cuffee in mounting the battery and overhauling the small arms. A Marblehead man named Spencer, who had left his home-port in disgust at New England's Federalist proclivities, was accepted as first lieutenant, and a low-voiced Virginian, Henry Breed, qualified as second. For surgeon Fellowes picked a city doctor, Aloysius O'Shaughnessy, red-headed son of a surgeon in Willett's regiment of the old New York Line.

The minor ratings were selected from some five hundred applicants, for the shipping trade was hamstrung, and employment in a fast heavy-armed privateer was infinitely preferable to enlistment in the regular army or militia, notwithstanding bounties and land-warrants freely offered as inducements to recruits. Fellowes took only healthy, seasoned men. When the brig hauled out of her slip, and anchored in the stream, she mustered the choicest crew, mariners said, that ever had sailed from New York.

Fellowes was imperturbably satisfied, and Joshua never tired of his visits of inspection. "I wish to God Ben would make up his mind, and sail," he'd exclaim, scowling overside at the stumpy hull of the True Bounty, lying a quarter mile nearer Governors Island. "'Tis vastly annoying, this delay."

Fellowes, himself worn by the tension, could only counsel patience.

"We're ready, Mr. Inglepin. The moment he slips his cable, we'll be after him."

And Joshua would sigh gustily, his ruddy features suddenly ugly with the passion that stewed in his soul.

"If we might only seize him when he sails! But doubtless he'd destroy aught damaging to his interest."

"Doubtless," Fellowes agreed curtly. And added as curtly: "And forget not you'll watch for us until I've brought the Badger to action, aye, if it takes a year."

Strangely, Joshua never resented such reminders.

"To be sure, to be sure," he'd assent. "I mustn't be selfish. You have Collishawe to reckon with, too. And you do well to hate thoroughly, captain. You'll never regret it."

So he'd go overside to his wherry, piped by Tom and his mates, like an admiral into his barge.

Summer waned into fall and the waterfront speculated freely on the conjunction of circumstances that kept the two Inglepin ships in port. So did Ben and his friends. The Secret Service reports that came to Joshua every few days were full of such passages as this:

"Mr. Inglepin had with him over the Thursday Senator Pickering of Massachusetts. They attended a meeting at the Bank Coffee house in the evening. Hidgins, the waiter, says there was a deal of talk of secession, but mostly of the objective of Mr. Joshua Inglepin's new privateer brig. Mr. Benjamin assured the gentlemen he'd give the d—d rascals the slip."

Another time Mr. Daniel Webster, a young, fiery representative in congress from New Hampshire, and Mr. George Herbert were cited as having conducted an animated discussion at Ben's dinner table. "Curse this government," cried Mr. Herbert. "At six days' notice I'd march for Washington, and swear upon the altar not to return until Madison was buried beneath the ruins of the capital." A sentiment which Mr. Webster applauded. "This is no longer a free government," said he. "The Constitution is foully libeled. There is growing up in Washington a fabric of despotism. We must take measures, gentlemen, desperate measures if need be."

Finally, in September, when the fall gales began to blow in earnest, the True Bounty loaded a cargo of barreled flour, salt fish, and sundries, and Ben Inglepin visited the custom house in person and took out clearance papers for Cadiz.

Joshua foamed with rage when he heard this. "The impertinence of it," he fumed. "The d—n feller's been trading with the enemy. Aye, and if the truth be known, he is, now. Cadiz! H—l, Fellowes, there are roads from Cadiz to Wellington's front. Cadiz! Why not Southampton, and be done with it?"

Joshua made a nuisance of himself occasionally, but it was he who fetched the first warning of the True Bounty's sailing.

The day had been overcast, with light airs quartering from south to east. Fellowes was sitting at supper in the main cabin, solitary by choice, when a thump sounded overhead, and Joshua pelted through the companionway.

"They're off!" shouted the merchant.

"Off? Nonsense, sir, my lookouts—"

"No, no! I mean Ben and the girl—and that creature that 'tends her. I saw 'em, Fellowes. Saw 'em pile out of their house, bag and baggage. They came in a coach, but I beat 'em. By G—d, I ran a race!"

Knuckles battered the door, and Tom Grogan rolled into the cabin.

"Mr. Spencer's compliments, cap'n, and thar's two smallboats comin' alongside the True Bounty, and her hands aloft on the yards."

"You're right," exclaimed Fellowes, jumping for the companionway.

The night had turned clear when he reached the deck, and the stillness in the air indicated one of those calms which precede a radical shift of wind. Spencer, the first lieutenant, a gruff, bearded sea-dog—whose proud boast was that he'd "sailed with Bowditch, the navigator"—sniffed uneasily like a dog hunting a trail.

"Aye, aye, Captain," he responded to a question. "Something's brewin', but don't ask me what. I'd say a nor'wester, if 'twasn't for them stars."

Breed, the Virginian second lieutenant, who seldom spoke, held up a forefinger for attention.

"What's that?" he asked in his soft voice.

"That," was a distant murmur in the air, and glancing across the roofs and trees of the city toward the Hudson, Fellowes noticed a low bank of clouds drifting above the Palisades.

"Here she comes! Topmen aloft, Mr. Spencer," he ordered crisply. "Double-reef tops'ls. Mr. Breed, make haste with that anchor."

There was a rush of men to their stations, ratlines twanging under the push of seaboots. Peering downstream through nightglasses, Fellowes caught a momentary glimpse of the upper yards of the True Bounty, ghostly with drooping canvas, before the thickening darkness blanketed her.

"But—but—you're really going?" Joshua quavered beside him.

"Yes, sir, and we'll be hugging the True Bounty's taffrail," Fellowes assured his employer. "But you must be going, sir. The river will be wet for you when that wind strikes us."

Joshua paused at the gangway, and grasped Fellowes' hand, a look of concern on his rubicund features.

"You must hate, remember," he pleaded. "With all of yourself. Not just one of 'em. The whole lot. And if you feel you're slacking up on one of 'em, why, bear down harder on her—ah—him."

"I dare swear I'll be able to, sir," Fellowes answered sadly. "Good-by, and bid your wherrymen row for their lives."

Regulating Climate

Just as in winter one opens his window to let in the cold air when the room is too warm, a Washington meteorologist suggests using the ice of the polar regions to regulate the earth's climate. This may be done by having international expeditions sail to the Arctic and Antarctic and blast huge chunks of ice from the glaciers. This would let more icebergs into the oceans and would considerably moderate the heat of summer. Those icebergs which are naturally found in the North Atlantic have a beneficial effect on the climate of Europe, among other things preventing droughts. Similarly, Antarctic icebergs are of benefit to Australia.

Historic American Castle

Romance, war and ghostly legend hang over Bacon's castle, whose huge diamond-shaped chimneys are landmarks for miles around the eastern edge of Surrey county, in Virginia. One of the oldest buildings in the state, built in 1655, it is marvelously perserved. Because of the castle's proximity to Jamestown, and since it was in the track of the rebels led by Nathaniel Bacon, Capt. Lawrence Baker was forced to flee from the castle during Bacon's rebellion of 1675-76. The castle was seized by young Bacon's followers and fortified, and since that time has borne the name, Bacon's castle.

Newport—An engineering survey of sewage disposal problems of South St. Paul and Newport was launched by the metropolitan drainage commission preliminary to proposals to include the packing plants in the proposed sewage disposal system of the Twin Cities.

Minneapolis—The Minnesota League of Women Voters started on January 9 a weekly series of radio programs to be given Thursdays from 5:00 to 5:30 over WCCO. The first talks of the series picture women's struggle for political equality and for the various civil and legal rights and privileges that they now enjoy. Future programs will trade the development of women's interest and influence in government as shown in the program and activities of the League of Women Voters all over the country. The period assigned to the 1930 talks will be known as "The Voter's Hour." Miss Marguerite M. Wells, state president, is the speaker announced for January 23.

Sleepy Eye—A $20,000 distillery plant was uncovered on a farm six miles west of here. Three persons were arrested.

Mankato—Mrs. May Arnold was sentenced to serve not more than seven years at the state reformatory for women at Shakopee by District Judge Harry A. Johnson for stealing $2,000 from her husband.

Sandstone—The body of Matthew T. Levi, 36 years old, World war veteran, who committed suicide on a farm near Kerrick by shooting himself, was brought here and sent to Nelson, Wis. A widow survives.

Any COLD
That cold may lead to something serious, if neglected. The time to do something for it is now. Don't wait until it develops into bronchitis. Take two or three tablets of Bayer Aspirin as soon as you feel a cold coming on. Or as soon as possible after it starts. Bayer Aspirin will head off or relieve the aching and feverish feeling—will stop the headache. And if your throat is affected, dissolve two or three tablets in a quarter-glassful of warm water, and gargle. This quickly soothes a sore throat and reduces inflammation and infection. How A College Athlete Keeps Himself Well
BOB DEMING of Colgate, claims that a sensible method of health has really made life a pleasure for him. Mr. Deming writes that at first he could not believe this simple thing was the cause of his buoyant spirits. Finally, however, he had to admit that it was Nujol which was keeping him well, besides giving him, as he says, "five times the vitality."
"Believe me," he says "having free and regular bodily elimination makes all the difference in the world to a diver as well as to any other athlete. I can't afford to be nervous, sluggish, or depressed while diving. It just isn't done! I would like to urge any one, whether they think they are in good health or not, to give Nujol a try-out. It certainly can't do any harm, and I'll bet it would make them feel a hundred per cent better. It's worth trying!"
Mr. Deming has just about told the whole story. He is right in believing that Nujol contains no drugs, no medicines of any kind. It is tasteless and colorless as pure water. It is simply harmless internal lubrication, which your body needs as much as any other machine. Regularly as clock work, Nujol cleans out of your body those poisons which we all have, and which make us low in our minds, tired, headachy, and below par.
The way for you to find out how much better Nujol will make you feel is to try it for a few days. You can get a bottle in a sealed package at any drug store. It costs only a few cents, but it makes you feel like a million dollars. Do you know how many thousands of people keep themselves well and happy just by using Nujol? Why shouldn't you feel well all the time? You can! Get yourself a bottle of Nujol today!

The upsets of Children
All children are subject to little upsets. They come at unexpected times. They seem twice as serious in the dead of night. But there's one form of comfort on which a mother can always rely; good old Castoria. This pure vegetable preparation can't harm the tiniest infant. Yet mild as it is, it soothes a restless, fretful baby like nothing else. Its quick relief soon sees the youngster comfortable once more, back to sleep. Even an attack of colic, or diarrhea, yields to the soothing influence of Castoria.
Keep Castoria in mind, and keep a bottle in the house—always. Give a few drops to any child whose tongue is coated, or whose breath is bad. Continue with Castoria until the child is grown! Every drugstore has Castoria; the genuine has Chas. H. Fletcher's signature on the wrapper.

The Tournament of Roses

IN CELEBRATION of their appreciation of the climate and environment in which they live, the residents of Pasadena, Calif., some thirty-odd years ago, founded the Tournament of Roses—having conceived the idea from a floral fete in Nice, France, which since has been held annually on New Year's day.

In the beginning there was no thought of the elaborate floats of this day and age—the good folks merely trimmed their buggies and wagons with flowers and drove through the streets in parade formation. A marked success from the start, the tournament has been elaborated upon and enlarged until it has grown to unbelievable proportions and world-wide renown—the product of the combined efforts of the civic, social and other organizations in constructive co-operation.

Usually there are a hundred or more entries. As many as 100,000 cut blossoms have been used on a single float. The labor of some 5,000 persons, working the major portion of the night before, is necessary to decorate the float, as the live blossoms necessarily must be put in place within a few hours before the parade starts. The cost of constructing and decorating the floats approximates $50,000.

Many of the flower-bedecked creations, filled with beautiful girls in fancy costumes, represent southern California towns—each vying with all others, in friendly but earnest competition, to present the most elaborate or outstandingly unique float.

It is estimated that some 200,000 persons, in addition to those residing in Pasadena, come to witness this gorgeous spectacle which required two hours in passing.

School Notes

Theme dictated by a Junior girl:

A DREAM

I was surely dying. There was the most terrible pain through my heart, or was it in my digentive system? Now I feel better and that surely is a sign of death, as anyone having that experience can tell you.

Then an old woman like me must die sooner or later. Later, in my case, as I'm ninety-three now. I had hoped to be a century old, but now I know I cannot.

The past comes back to me. I remember when I was a high school girl. That was long, long ago. We had such an odd class, — that was when we were Juniors. Odd because of so many they things. They were the only part of the high school that had to write themes on storms, parrots, dreams, windy corners, and winter sports in English class. Wasn't that odd?

None of the Juniors wore glasses. That was more odd, ond plainly shows that one can get to be a Junior without studying so hard one needs spectacles,

The only Irishman in school was a Junior at that time. He tried to tell us Daniel Webster wrote the dictionary. I really believed it myself for a while, but now I'm old enough to know better.

Johnson is a common name, isn't it? Well, in those days the only two Johnsons in High School were Juniors.

Yes, all ten Juniors were remarkable. It has been said that they're the people that put the June in Juniors! June, you know, in the month of roses; and is very highly spoken of by lovers — and poets. Yes, we learned that in High School, when we were Juniors.

My pain is worse. Guess I'll say good-bye. O-o-o-o-oh!

"When are you going to stop your crowing and yelling? Better not eat pancakes for supper if you're going to act like this!"

That was no spirit voice! I wasn't dying; it wasn't heart trouble—only pancakes, and a dream.

Ethel Johnson.

High School

The Chemistry class made hydrogen sulphide on Munday—much to everyone's discomfort. Some of the pupils declared that they should have taken clothes pins to school because of the odor which is much like rotten eggs.

Seventh and Eighth Grades

The seventh grade girls have shown a great deal of interest in their book reports. The pupils have showd much improvement in their painting since the beginning of the year.

Mr. Overum: What is a man-eating animal of Africa?

Pupil: Mosquitos.

Fifth and Sixth Grades

The Industrial Art class, composed of the fifth and sixth grades, are making a movie of the main street of Holt. The work has proved very interesting and they are all enthusiastic about it.

The Hygiene class are making up a group of "safety first" rules and are illustrating them in various ways which are very interesting.

In the last week report on the fifth and sixth grades, an error was made by the writer, about the spelling race. The fifth grade is represented by the Willys-Knight and the sixth grade by the Ford.

Third and Fourth Grades

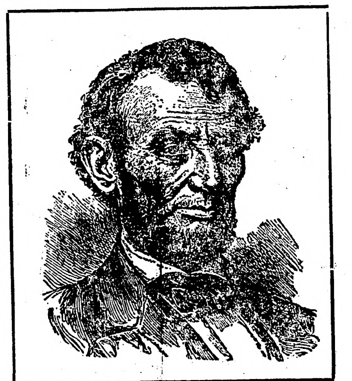
Our pupils are busy making Valentines which they will distribute on the Fourteenth. The Reading Club has arranged to give a program on that day.

All the pupils received a perfect the other day because the room wss redecorated with new curtains.

First and Second Grades

First and second grades are making Lincoln booklets, which are to be ready by February 12th. Lila Johnson has not returned back to school.

Orla Reierson had a misfortune of breaking her arm. The first and second grade pupils are going to see her.



A. Lincoln, born Feb. 12, 1809, in a log cabin, demonstrates the old philosophy that greatness often masquerades in strange guises. Lincoln was both great and famous. Think of the host of great men who remained unknown simply because people judged by outward appearance only!

Auto Licence Fee Time Up Feb. 15

February is the shortest month in the year, yet we have to pay taxes twice. The last day to get automobile licenses is February 15, and personal preperty taxes must be paid before Feb. 28.

The auto license fee, however, is not a tax in the ordinary sense of the word, according to a highway bulletin. The license fee is just a part of the car owner's transpotation bill, and he pays according to the use he makes of the roads. The man with a large, expensive car pay much more than a man with a small car. The man with two or three cars pays accordingly.

Other taxes for the support of the general government are based on the ability to pay, regardless of direct benefits. School taxes are based on the property a man owns, and not on the number of children he sends to the school. Very often, those who the smallest taxes have the most children.

When you buy a railroad ticket or pay a freight bill you pay both for the operation of the train and the upkeep of the rails and roadbed. When you travel by automobile or haul your goods by truck, you pay the vehicle bill at the garage and the filling station, while the road cost is paid through the secretary of state. It is called a tax, but it is part of your travel or freight bill.

The auto tax, it is true. is not the whole road bill. There is also the gas tax, and the portion of your property tax which goes to state aid, county and town roads.

But the license fee and the two-thirds of the gas tax going to the trunk highway fund, are less than five per cent of what the average car owner pays for the upkeep of his car, while all the road taxes, state and local, are only ten per cent of the average motor bill.

The auto tax does not help to build local roads, someone pays.

But since the state took over the trunk highways, the counties and townships have been able to spend all their money on the secondary roads. More miles of county and town roads have been graveled in the last nine years than in the whole previous history of the state.

The Great Northern will run a special train from Warroad to Crookston, to take passengers to the Red River Valley Winter Shows at Crookston, Wednesday Feb. 12. The same schedule as last year will be observed. The fare for the round trip from Holt is $2.26. The train arrives in Holt at 8:40 a.m., and at Crookston at 11:05.

Returning, the train leaves Crookston at 10:30 p.m. the same day. Those who plan on making the trip should let the local station agent know about it a few days in advance.

Lokstad of Newfolden Is Appointed Enumerator

Hans J. Lokstad of Newfolden has been appointed enumerator for the Census of Distribution and Manufactures for Marshall County and will visit all the business institutions in the County and solicit from them the information called for in the Census schedule covering the above subject.

The law requires that all the questions be answered as completely and fully as it is possible to do so. Mr. Lokstad and all others connected with the Census Bureau who will handle these schedules are sworn to secrecy and none of the information given the enumerator will become public, but will be used in arriving at the totals necessary for a complete survey of the country's business.

This enumeration will begin early in February and must be completed before April 2, when the regular population census begins.

SHORT LESSONS IN DAIRYING

LESSON 89

PRODUCTION: Hungry animals in a cold barn and lying in wet; dirty stalls are not profitable, and you are not happy and satisfied as their owner.

MANUFACTURING: In the sale of Land O'Lakes butter, except the butter sold locally by the creamery, there is a government certificate in every pound package, stating that the butter has been inspected by a Federal-State grader and found to score 93 or above. No other butter carries this government certificate.

MARKETING: Land O'Lakes Creameries has always worked to keep the price of butter up to a price that is profitable for the farmers. The old line butter commission firms (worthy enough in their way) try to get butter by offering the market price or a premium above the market price. A firm that pays half a cent above the market is considered good even tho the same firm may be working on the side to keep the market price down. Creameries that are not working with Land O'Lakes evidently look at the half cent. Land O'Lakes Creameries look at the market price and work to see that that price is right.

Desperate Wives have been known to boil their husbands' pipes in lye. This kills the lingering authority of over-strong tobacco, but good-bye pipe! Well, it's time those husbands discovered Sir Walter Raleigh's favorite smoking mixture. "Air Rights"

Air isn't free any more. In this era of vertical cities "air rights" command a respectable sum. Only recently the 38-story Harriman building on lower Broadway paid $742,500 for a 33-year lease on the air above an adjoining five-story structure. This is to insure tenants of the Harriman structure air and light for that length of time.—Pathfinder Magazine.

Acidity

The common cause of digestive difficulties is excess acid. Soda cannot alter this condition, and it burns the stomach. Something that will neutralize the acidity is the sensible thing to take. That is why physicians tell the public to use Phillips Milk of Magnesia.

One spoonful of this delightful preparation can neutralize many times its volume in acid. It acts instantly; relief is quick, and very apparent. All gas is dispelled; all sourness is soon gone; the whole system is sweetened. Do try this perfect anti-acid, and remember it is just as good for children, too, and pleasant for them to take.

Any drug store has the genuine, prescriptional product.

CHINESE BANDITS LOOT WIDE AREA

Alarming Increase in Raids Is Noted.

An alarming increase in banditry in at least 10 of China's 18 provinces is indicated in reports received by foreign legations here from their consuls.

This state of affairs is attributed chiefly to the persistence of civil war.

The consular reports state that most of the bandits are not professionals, but men and women who have been driven to prey upon their neighbors because of desperate need of food.

In some of the cases reported whole villages banded together to make raids upon neighboring villages to obtain food supplies. Such instances were reported from Szechwan, Hupeh, Kansu, Anwei and Fukian provinces.

In several provinces—notably Honan, Shautung and Kwang-si—consular reports indicate that former soldiers grouped into well organized bandit gangs have looted towns and villages and kidnaped persons even of moderate means for ransom. Several army commanders have not paid their troops for months, even years, and eventually the soldiers desert to become robbers.

North Manchuria has been a chief sufferer from the recent spread of banditry. During recent years, with comparative peace and order, this section has prospered, and this government had succeeded in suppressing the Mongol, Chinese and White Russian robbers who infested the area.

But the dispute with Soviet Russia has preoccupied the government troops, with the result that the bandits have become more active than ever. The 2,000 mile border between Siberia and Manchuria is out of reach of the Chinese troops, and affords easy prey for the robber bands.

Frenchman Flies 12 Years Without Crash

Paris.—Jacques Corsin, thirty-two years old, who was an "ace" in the French air service during the final years of the war at the age of twenty, has been recognized by the Aero club as the pilot with the greatest flying record—6,533 hours, or 272 consecutive days and nights in the air.

In 12 years since he obtained his pilot's license, the French youth has flown 1,000,000 kilometers, has carried 10,000 passengers and never had an accident. He is now pilot of one of the commercial planes of the French Air Union.

Born in 1897, Corsin engaged in the French army at the outbreak of war in 1914 as a boy of seventeen. He went through the fighting at Verdun, Ypres and elsewhere and won his stripes as a sergeant and the Croix de Guerre.

He went into the aviation in 1917 and was cited in army orders for his brilliant air fighting. After demobilization he went to Peru to teach army flyers and while there performed some sensational feats on the plateau of Cino de Pasco at 4,500 meters altitude.

Since 1921 he has been a commercial pilot, flying the Paris-London and Paris-Marseilles routes.

Elk in Montana Spurn Chance to Roam Preserve

Martinsdale, Mont.—Thirty fat elk take the position that it's far better to be on the inside looking out than on the outside looking in.

Released from the DuRank elk ranch pastures so that they might live within the nearby elk game preserve, these sleek animals refuse to leave the vicinity of their former home. Life was easy there and food was good—why change?

As a result the elk have been loitering close to the ranch fences, apparently begging to be taken back. Their attitude has given rise to a problem of animal salesmanship—how best to sell them the advantages of a preserve.

Find Petrified Fish Head 30,000,000 Years Old

San Francisco.—Receipt of the petrified head of an armored cretaceous fish that swam along the shores of what is now Texas, some 30,000,000 years ago, has been announced by Professor W. D. Matthew, director of the University of California Museum of Paleontology. The new addition to the museum was received from Dr. Charles L. Baker, geologist for the Rio Bravo Oil company, now working in Texas.

Jail for Church Meal

Birmingham, Eng.—Hungry for two days, Walter Cales broke into a church and ate the sacramental bread and drank the wine. Then he surrendered and was sent to jail.

Hog Trees Black Bear That Attacked Her Pig

Vashon, Wash.—A strange tale of black bear's being treed by a hog is vouched for by Stein Dunkel.

The rancher came upon the scene just as the bear had attempted to steal a baby pig. He hastened home for his rifle. Upon returning he found the big bear was in a tree with the hog patroling its base.

MINNESOTA PRISON CALLED BEST IN U. S.

Industrial Organization Is Commended in Handbook.

St. Paul, Minn.—The Stillwater prison plant is characterized as the best of its kind in the country by the third issue of the Handbook of American Prisons and Reformatories, now being published by the National Society of Penal Information.

The handbook also commends the prison industrial organizations, but points out the need of a more progressive policy in the matter of discipline and in the development of an educational program.

The article says in part:

"This (the prison) is a notable institution in two important respects: Its plant is the best of its kind in the country and its industrial system one of the most effective. The plant, carefully built as one construction job, gives this institution a physical equipment that is probably unsurpassed in the country.

Has Enviable Record.

"Industrially the institution has an enviable record. Its shops are modern in design and construction, well lighted and ventilated. The working conditions throughout are excellent.

"The progress made in humanizing the institution and developing individual instead of mass treatment has not been nearly as rapid as the progress in institutional and industrial development. In fact, the great plant and huge industry tend to dwarf the individual and unavoidably make him see that he is merely a cog in a machine and an unimportant unit in a great institution.

"This inescapable problem is common to every great institution, but it is intensified here by the retention of the silence system, by a monotony of routine and by a regimentation of life, both in the cells and out, which has been abandoned in many prisons of the country. The silence system, for instance, has been given up for several decades in many states.

Plant Called Admirable.

"The state is fortunate in having a plant admirable in so many respects and an industrial system that has covered the cost of running the institution every year since 1902. But the accomplishments in these important fields make the case stronger for a more progressive policy in the realm of discipline, the development of education and other constructive features that have proved their value in institutional life, and a prison regime which makes every possible effort to treat the inmates as individual human beings rather than as a mass."

Commenting on the board of control, the handbook says:

"There appears to be a tradition that members of the board who have served effectively shall be reappointed. The result is a continuity in membership and a corresponding lack of appointments for political reasons such as are made in neighboring states."

Couple With 24 Children Air Troubles in Court

Atlantic City, N. J.—Twenty-four children figured in the domestic debate of Fred Parslo, an $18-a-week millhand, and his wife, Millie, in Judge Smathers' court here. Mrs. Parslo had her husband summoned on a nonsupport charge.

It developed from the testimony of the wife and some of the children, she was a widow when she married Parslo three years ago. She brought with her 13 children by her first husband. Parslo had 11 children by his first wife, who died several years before. The two groups of boys and girls ranged in age from four to twenty-two years.

Judge Smathers decided that Mrs. Parslo wasn't any worse off than before she married Parslo and that he would have to pay her only $5 weekly. He agreed and was freed.

Squirrels' Stores of Fir Seed Robbed for Market

Ryderwood, Wash.—Lumbermen now save by-products of forests. Three thousand bushels of fir seed cones were purchased by a lumber company at Longview, where drying operations to extract the valuable seed are in progress.

From a ton to one and one-half tons of clean seed will be obtained from these cones. Harvesters received $5 a bushel for them; the lumber company expects $15 a pound for the tree seed. Australia, Europe, Japan and New Zealand as well as the United States are in the market.

Hundreds of bushels of cones were recovered from caches made by gray squirrels, and thousands of these animals will have to hustle other winter supplies. Cones stored by rodents contain the finest seed, declare foresters.

Town in North Alaska Hears Continuous Radio

Point Barrow, Alaska.—This northernmost tip of Alaska is enjoying one continuous round of enjoyable music gathered in by radio from all parts of the world. Because of the strategic radio position near the top of the world and the almost continuous darkness, combined with remarkable clarity of the atmosphere and differences in time, Point Barrow radio fans receive perfect programs from Japan, England, Germany, the United States and all corners of the globe.

ARMY TO TEST S O S BY PLANE'S RADIO

"Mother" Ship to Accompany Squad to Coast.

Washington.—The army air corps will carry out an experiment to make long distance flights safer through the use of the short wave radio when the first pursuit group wings its way over the 3,500 miles of ice-bound country from Mt. Clemens, Mich., to Spokane, Wash., and back, this month.

Should the experiment prove a success, it is understood, the army is expected to issue an order that all army planes making long distance flights must be protected by short wave radio devices.

The present experiment is to be carried out with the aid of the American Radio Relay league and the General Electric company of Schenectady, N. Y. Eighteen fast pursuit planes and a slower and much larger "mother" radio ship will be in the experimental group.

The radio ship will follow the speedy fighting planes and will keep a sharp lookout for ships in distress. Every morning the radio ship will be in communication with the powerful short wave station of the General Electric company at Schenectady. That station will listen for the first ten minutes of each flying hour for S O S signals from the radio ship.

If an S O S is sent and received the Schenectady station will rebroadcast it to the army air corps posts in the area where the accident has occurred. Also arrangements will be made to send the S O S out through regular long wave radio stations to the Northwest in order to inform people living in the vicinity.

Morning Snooze Better Than Setting-Up Drills

New York.—It is not only nicer to stay in bed, when the sun shining overhead, or however Harry Lauder's song phrases it, but it is a lot wiser than getting up and going through those setting-up exercises the radio boys reel off for the hopeful.

This is the opinion of the 124 members of the Society of Directors of Physical Education in Colleges, as expressed in a report read at their thirty-third annual meeting at the Hotel Astor.

Such exercises contribute little of social, psychological, safety or recreational value and add very little to the physical development of their adherents, the report states.

This report was the result of two years of investigation conducted by the committee on curriculum research, and is based on the answers from these 124 members of the association. Of the 30 sports listed, calisthenics rates a poor twenty-ninth. Swimming and diving rate first.

War Hero Ends Life; "Frees Girl of Burden"

Council Bluffs, Iowa.—The medal of the French Legion of Honor remained today to remind Catherine Smith of her heroic fiance, who killed himself rather than burden her.

In the battle of Chateau Thierry E. C. Anderson so distinguished himself that he was decorated by the French government. His valor cost one leg, however, and he was wounded in the other leg. After a decade of fighting his handicap Anderson learned that there was a likelihood that his remaining leg would have to be amputated.

Rather than burden Miss Smith with the cares of a helpless husband, Anderson shot himself with a revolver.

1929 Proves Hard Year on European Royalty

London.—The year 1929 has been a hard one on European royalty. The list of royal invalids has been a long and important one.

King George, Prince George and Princess Royal of England all have been confined to bed, but are now in good health. The sickness of England's king was the gravest of all.

The crown prince of Denmark has been another one of the 1929 list. Ex-King Manuel of Portugal recently underwent an operation. The latest victim is Prince Paul of Greece, bothered with throat and nose trouble.

Increases Coal Production

Ottawa, Ont.—From 631,320 tons in 1867, Canadian coal production advanced steadily until it reached 17,564,293 tons in 1928. The 1928 coal output exceeded the 1927 production by nearly 1 per cent. The principal increase in coal production in 1928 was in the province of Alberta, where an advance of 6 per cent was recorded over 1927. Greater tonnages were also mined in New Brunswick, Saskatchewan and British Columbia.

Save Vanishing Bald Eagle, Object of Bill

Washington.—The bald, or American eagle, is fast disappearing except as an emblem on coins and insignia of Uncle Sam, according to Representative Andresen (Rep.) of Minnesota. Accordingly he has introduced a bill forbidding the killing of eagles, except when they are caught attacking lambs, fawns, or foxes on fox farms.

Save Historic Edifice

Seventeen years of work now being completed to preserve St. Paul's cathedral, London, causes building experts to predict that the cathedral is safe for five centuries. More than £400,000 has been spent in the project. The dome of the shrine alone weighs 68,000 tons. The engineers are making the center of the building into a monolith by solidifying the piers that support the dome.

Denver Boy is a Winner

Every mother realizes how important it is to teach children good habits of conduct but many of them fail to realize the importance of teaching their children good bowel habits until the poisons from decaying waste held too long in the system have begun to affect the child's health.

Watch your child and at the first sign of constipation, give him a little California Fig Syrup. Children love its rich, fruity taste and it quickly drives away those distressing ailments, such as headaches, bad breath, coated tongue, biliousness, feverishness, fretfulness, etc. It gives them a hearty appetite, regulates their stomach and bowels and gives tone and strength to these organs so they continue to act normally, of their own accord. For over fifty years, leading physicians have prescribed it for half-sick, bilious, constipated children. More than 4 million bottles used a year shows how mothers depend on it.

Mrs. C. G. Wilcox, 3855½ Wolff St., Denver, Colorado, says: "My son, Jackie, is a prize winner for health, now, but we had a lot of trouble with him before we found his trouble was constipation and began giving him California Fig Syrup. It fixed him up quick, gave him a good appetite, made him sleep fine and he's been gaining in weight right along since the first few days, taking it."

To avoid inferior imitations of California Fig Syrup, always look for the word "California" on the carton.

Official estimates place the Hungarian corn crop at 75,000,000 bushels, 26,000,000 bushels more than in 1928.

Even tainted money is apt to have one or more strings to it.

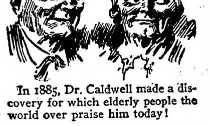
OLD DOCTOR'S IDEA IS BIG HELP TO ELDERLY PEOPLE



In 1885, Dr. Caldwell made a discovery for which elderly people the world over praise him today!

Years of practice convinced him that many people were endangering their health by a careless choice of laxatives. So he began a search for a harmless prescription which would be thoroughly effective, yet would neither gripe nor form any habit. At last he found it.

Over and over he wrote it, when he found people bilious, headachy, out of sorts, weak or feverish; with coated tongue, bad breath, no appetite or energy. It relieved the most obstinate cases, and yet was gentle with women, children and elderly people.

Today, this same famous, effective prescription, known as Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, is the world's most popular laxative. It may be obtained from any drugstore

"Lives, h—l!" rejoined Joshua, mercurially elated. "Nothing can happen to me—not until after I've caught Ben." His voice was indistinct as he descended the Jacob's-ladder. "You're safe—if—hate—enough. Hah, damme!" A bump announced his arrival in the wherry. "Good luck! A fat cruise! And hate, man, hate. Hate will see us through."

Fellowes turned from the gangway. A moan came out of the west, and a scunner of clouds blotted the sky. The moan tightened to a screech, and the gale hit them, physically vindictive, a monster that bellowed and clashed and yammered in the rigging, bent on piling the brig against the walls of Castle William that towered unseen above the Governors island shore. But the Centurion bore up nobly, light as a cork for all her burden of men and armament, faithful to her helm.

Rearing like a racehorse on the choppy combers, she edged safely around the west tip of the island, and squared away for the run down the Upper bay, a bowl of empty night, save for the True Bounty and the whooping wind. Fellowes was chagrined to find he could no longer discern the True Bounty. In desperation, he summoned Cuffee, whose vision, he knew, was better than any white man's—and Cuffee made short work of the difficulty.

"Cuffee no see him lan', Mars'r Fellowe', but dar him Chater' ship."

"Good! You take the wheel. Follow the True Bounty as closely as you can."

"Yah, Mars'r Fellowe'."

The brig bucked and sidled, swaying to the conflicting pressure of wind and wave and tide in the gut; but Cuffee held her to the course. Apparently, Chater steered by feel, here. Fellowes realized, with his first thrill, that the Centurion was at sea. Of the blockaders there was not a trace.

"Do you still see the True Bounty?" he asked Cuffee again.

"Yah, mars'r. Him dar."

But an hour or so after midnight a frown distorted the negro's scarred features, and he exclaimed angrily in his jungle dialect.

"Lost him?" cried Fellowes.

"Yah, him juju, mars'r. One time Cuffee see him, den him gone."

"He's no fool, Chater," Fellowes said grimly. "Mr. Spencer, take the deck, if you please. I'll turn in for a few hours."

CHAPTER X

Savor of Vengeance

Morning brought a dull, gray sky, an untiring wind—and empty horizons. Fellowes knew he must have long since outdistanced the cumbrous True Bounty, and shortened sail as much as he dared, but the Centurion fled before the gale at a fair twelve knots.

All that day and the next the nor'-wester stormed after them, but during the second night it blew itself out in a snow-squall, and Fellowes wore ship to retrace his course. Studying charts, he decided the True Bounty would steer north of the usual track to the Peninsula. Chater would hug the routes of the British convoys to Canada, choosing rather to risk being overhauled by an enemy cruiser than by his own countrymen—very possibly trusting to some form of protection from Admiral Cockburn. So for four days more the Centurion beat to the northward on a zigzag course that covered many miles of sea, but it wasn't until the fifth day that the cry of "Sail ho" from the maintop sent all hands to their stations.

The strange sail made a clumsy attempt to run away, but the brig overhauled him in less than two glasses, and a musket-shot across his bows sent him flapping into the wind. An hour later the George and Anne, of Liverpool, loaded with strouds, Yorkshire woolens, crockery and hardware, was diverted from Halifax to New York, with a Yankee prize crew in charge of her, and the Centurion bore off on her mission.

Northeast Fellowes steered on a slanting course that would carry him far to seaward of the coasting routes where the enemy cruisers kept watch and ward, far to seaward, too, of the Grand banks; but a week after the George and Anne had dwindled over the skyline a cold clammy fog wrapped the Centurion, and the privateer crawled along, with double lookouts at each masthead and on poop and fo'c's'le, the magazine open and the gun-crews mustered. That day they sailed as remote as though they had entered another world. Once a whale almost collided with them, and sounded indignantly beneath their keel. The night was so silent that the swish of the brig's cutwater could be heard aft on the poop. And the morning was as still. But noon saw a streak of sunshine overhead, and suddenly the fog-curtain was rent in tatters, and stoppers seemed to come out of their ears—for they heard all about them a muffled clamor: horns growling, tin-pans clanking, bells tolling, men shouting. A bristle of masts projected from the lingering shreds of mist, hulls took shape, scores of hulls, a stately seventy-four, flying an admiral's pennant, a brace of frigates.

"A Canada convoy," exclaimed Spencer. "We be good as stewed, cap'n."

"Not by a d—n sight," snapped Fellowes. "Aye, not if 'tis Admiral Warren, himself. Where's that signalman? Signalman, hither! Break out the Royal Navy ensign. Haste, man, haste! Now, the Stars and Stripes. Aye, you fool, on the same halyards. Run 'em up! Run 'em up!"

He leaped on the breach of a gun as the seventy-four, nearest of the men-o'-war, came squattering down from windward.

"Ahoy! What ship's that?" hailed an officer from her lofty poop, crowded with figures in blue and gold lace.

"Down, you men," Fellowes snarled at his curious crew. "Flat on the deck." And lifting speaking-trumpet to lips, returned the hail: "Aye, aye, sir! This is the American privateer Centurion, nineteen guns, Captain Lion Fellowes, out of New York—prize to the Semele frigate, Captain Lord Sandys."

Like all American privateersmen, Fellowes had been primed with the information available as to the cruising stations of the British men-o'-war, and he happened to recall that the Semele, a thirty-two, was a unit of the Jamaica squadron. The watch-officer of the seventy-four knew as much, and retorted promptly:

"Where did you leave your ship, sir?"

"Off the Mona passage."

There was a moment of consultation on the enemy's poop, then the same officer hailed again:

"And your name?"

"Lieutenant Broderick, sir," Fellowes answered desperately, casting a wary eye about him for an opening to slip clear.

"Broderick, eh? You ain't rated to the Semele, sir—not by my Annual."

"I am newly transferred to her, sir," Fellowes improvised. "From the Cape."

"Ha, sir! I find no Broderick listed as a lieutenant—"

A pair of Tyne traders, heavy-loaded, blundered out of a swathing of mist, and staggered aboard the Centurion. Fellowes, swift to seize the opportunity, pretended to great anxiety.

"Luff up, there, d—n' ye," he hailed the first of the merchantmen, with all the typical arrogance of a navy officer. "What d'ye mean, my man? Luff up, I say! Here, you at the wheel—" to his own helmsman—"bear away from the rascals. By the Fiend, they'll run us down!"

Skillfully, he interposed the hapless traders between the brig and the seventy-four, and urged his topmen aloft.

Where Turpin Tarried

On the Great North road, in England, stands a very ancient and historical inn, known as the "Eight Bells," and this inn is the cause of much disturbance amongst the local inhabitants because of the likelihood of its being closed down. This old inn has many interesting historical facts attached to it, and, amongst others, Dick Turpin is said to have made frequent calls at the "Eight Bells" during his famous rides between London and York. Another famous writer, according to local report, was Bill Sikes.

No Editorial Comment

When the Daily Courant, London's first successful daily newspaper, appeared in 1702, it consisted of a single page of two columns and professed to give only foreign news. It assured its readers that it would not give any comments of its own, "supposing other people to have sense enough to make reflections for themselves." The Courant came to an end in 1735, when it was absorbed in the Daily Gazeteer.—Detroit News.

Analyzing ...YOU...

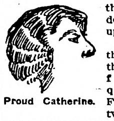
With the New Science of Syllabics

By C. J. COFFMAN
Dean of All the Enumerators

Catherine

"Beset around, and harassed,
With doubts and fears of yore,
By present ties embarrassed
You are what's gone before."

If you believe in reincarnation, Catherine, you can explain to yourself much better the aspirations and desires that surge up within you.



Proud Catherine.

Before you in this world of ours, there have been five English queens, two French queens and two Russian empresses who bore the name of Catherine. Doesn't that intrique you a little?

And then, too, Henry VIII, during his lifetime, married three separate Catherines, one of whom he beheaded. But that's not nice for this story and we hope that you were not any of these, in former incarnations.

Of the twelve Catherines mentioned prominently in history, I am sure that none of them bore themselves more proudly, or could carry themselves more finely, than you.

Now you can use, or misuse, this faculty of pride. Rightly used it becomes self-respect, force of character. Wrongly used it becomes egotism, conceit and arrogance.

The reason I am analyzing you in particular, Catherine, is so that I can help you to get the best out of life for yourself. There is one little art in this that may be very helpful, and here is your formula:

Be very humble within, when in the presence of anybody who can teach you some one thing. (ANYbody can teach you SOME thing.)

The other part of the formula is to be very strong and vigorous in your nature when you are teaching anyone else, because the more you appear to know what you are talking about, the better the other person can learn it.

According to the ancients there are syllables in your name which indicate the ability to pray effectively. Other syllables indicate the increase of that prayer. Catherine, you can have anything you want, if you will study how to bring yourself into conscious realization of the contact of your soul with the higher sources.

* * *

Anne

"Who is it that intrigues the effort of man
And makes him more noble as fast as he can?
Who is it that gave him success as he ran,
To fulfill his life-work, the answer is Anne."

You are the answer to the young man's prayer in more ways than one, Anne. Your name comes very naturally from an ancient word meaning to answer or bear witness.

The Firm Mouth of Anne.

By shortening this ancient syllable to your two first letters, AN, we have a meaning similar to wherever, or anywhere. This may imply that anywhere you go, you are the answer, as inferred in the verse above.

Your strong, kindly mouth indicates this, and shows you able to go through complicated tangles of surmises, to find the real answer.

Among the most notable of those who have found the right answer to life, might be mentioned Anne Morrow Lindbergh. A more beautiful or romantic setting could scarcely be imagined.

Or, we might mention Anne Nichols, who wrote the successful play, "Able's Irish Rose," which ran for seven years on Broadway. Through this play, Anne "rose" from obscurity and comparative poverty to real wealth and attainment.

What is possible to Anne, is possible to Anne, even if your other name is not Nichols or Morrow.

So plunge ahead, and do not use the wrong part of your name, the NAH, which meant to humble yourself.

Anne is the best version of your name, and the strongest one, so keep it in just that spelling.

Christening Customs

Etiquette says that in other days of stricter observances a baby was baptized in the Catholic and High Episcopal church on the first or at least second Sunday after its birth. But today the christening is usually delayed at least until the young mother is up and about again. Often it is put off for months, and in some denominations children need not be christened until they are several years old. The usual age is from two to six months.

Outdoor Noah's Ark

The Island of Marajo, at the 200-mile-wide mouth of the Amazon river, is as large as the kingdom of Denmark. An area of dense jungles, great prairies, rivers and a long shore line on the Atlantic, it is a haven for a vast congregation of wild life. Animals, birds, fish and gorgeous insects abound in great numbers, including the jacare, or Brazilian crocodile.

Babies will cry, often for no apparent reason. You may not know what's wrong, but you can always give Castoria. This soon has your little one comforted; if not, you should call a doctor. Don't experiment with medicines intended for the stronger systems of adults! Most of those little upsets are soon soothed away by a little of this pleasant-tasting, gentle-acting children's remedy that children like.

It may be the stomach, or may be the little bowels. Or in the case of older children, a sluggish, constipated condition. Castoria is still the thing to give. It is almost certain to clear up any minor ailment, and could by no possibility do the youngest child the slightest harm. So it's the first thing to think of when a child has a coated tongue; won't play, can't sleep, is fretful or out of sorts. Get the genuine; it always has Chas. H. Fletcher's signature on the package.

"Always in Good Humor" says Bill "and my Folks, too"

YOUNG BILL FREEMAN, Jr., of 707 South Street, Key West, Florida, has started in early telling the world his secret of health. "I don't know that I would have been the cause of divorce," writes Bill, through his mother, "but certainly the first three months of my life my mother was a nervous wreck, and so was I. I never saw father because he didn't like my disposition—and every day it was a fight at our house—either castor oil or an enema, and I was just about ready to quit home.

"Finally, they started in giving me a half teaspoonful of Nujol night and morning. I am five months old now, and I take Nujol every other night, which keeps me so well regulated that I am always in good humor, and so are my folks."

How simple it is, after all. No drugs, no medicines, no irritating cathartics. Just simple and natural lubrication which our bodies need as much as any machine. Nujol is not absorbed by the body. It is non-fattening; it can form no habit; it cannot hurt the smallest baby. What it does is keep our bodies internally clean of the poisons we all have and which, unless they are swept away as regularly as clock work, give us headaches, make us feel sick, low in our minds, blue, down on the world.

Nujol is as tasteless and colorless as pure water. Start this very night and see how different you will feel after a few days. It costs but a few cents and it makes you feel like a million dollars. You can buy it at any drug store in a sealed package. With millions of people all over the world keeping well with Nujol there is no reason why you, too, should not be joyous, full of pep, with the happiness that comes of good health. Dynamite Promotes Prosperity On Minnesota's Fertile Farms

Dynamite makes a ditch in less than a second's time. Above—No rock is big enough to resist dynamite's tremendous power.

Dynamite cleaned out this Faribault county ditch.

THE various drainage ditch systems of Minnesota have an important bearing on the state's agricultural and dairy interests. Taken as a whole these ditches constitute a valuable form of crop insurance by reason of the protection they afford to cultivated and pasture lands in times of excessive rainfall or when a surplus of water results from thawing snow.

Some of these ditches were dug nearly a half century ago, when hand labor or crude excavating machinery was the only means available for doing the work. In more recent years, the cost of ditch construction has been markedly facilitated and the cost greatly reduced through the use of dynamite for blasting them. Equal importance to its use in making new ditches is now given to dynamite for the cleaning out of ditches which have had their capacity dangerously decreased by partially filling up with eroded soil and other materials which obstruct the flow of the water and cause the flooding of adjacent lands.

Permanent Benefits

Direct and practical benefits of a permanent character also follow the removal of stumps and boulders scattered over cultivated fields. Beneficial effects likewise result from the straightening of small streams that follow winding courses through fertile fields. Work of similar character is also resorted to for the protection of highway bridges where the channels of creeks have so changed as to endanger the foundations of the structures.

During recent months the interest of Minnesota farmers has been apparent from the attendance at demonstrations of the uses of explosives for blowing out occasional stumps and boulders on their neighbors' farms. Cottonwood county tillers of the soil have been interested spectators on several occasions. A number of those in the vicinity of Windom were present at the farm of William McDonald, where they learned of approved methods of removing stones from fields. One large stone and three small ones were blasted to show just how to proceed with work of the kind. Another demonstration in the Windom locality was given on the land of John Long. In this instance, eight stones were blasted. Mr. Long has since undertaken the removal of all stones on his property. At the J. A. Christensen farm, near Stroden, dynamite was demonstrated in the removal of six stones. Explosives for use in attacking the considerable quantities of field stones in the Stroden region are being supplied through the Farm Bureau. Five big stones were blown out during a demonstration before farmers at the Jacob Franz farm, in the locality of Mountain Lake.

Expert Shows How

Mostly, the Minnesota demonstrations of good farmkeeping methods have been conducted by B. H. Gustafson, formerly of the University of Minnesota, but now a member of the field force of the du Pont Agricultural Extension Section. This organization was formed to assist farmers in their problems where the uses of explosives have a bearing on the solutions. Larry F. Livingston, a graduate of the University of Washington, who was in charge of land clearing operations for the University of Wisconsin and Michigan State College, is the director of the activities of the section. Mr. Gustafson has had the co-operation of county agents and Farm Bureaus in his work.

Farmers Turn Out

In Nobles County, Minnesota, a number of farmers saw for the first time how explosives may be employed to advantage. At the Sidney Cook farm, near Edgerton, a number of stumps were blown out and three large stones were shattered by dynamite. Rice County farmers were present in numbers at the farm of Francis H. Dulac in the vicinity of Faribault, where boulders and green elm stumps were removed. Frank Korn of Medford had his neighbors present to see the blasting of a large limestone rock and the blowing out of seven hardwood stumps, both green and old.

The Redwood County Farm Bureau sponsored a series of demonstrations, with Mr. Gustafson in charge. These included a variety of operations on the lands of Vunus Keith of Walnut Grove and the Stava brothers near Vesta. Blasting of boulders by mudcapping and the snakehole method was shown by Mr. Gustafson on the farms of R. M. Campbell and J. F. Conner in the Redwood Falls section of Redwood County.

The interest aroused in the uses of farm explosives by the activities of county agents, the Minnesota Farm Bureau and other agencies is reflected in the fact that not only farmers are planning to use dynamite extensively this fall, but various county and other public projects are contemplated.

SEED BARGAINS OFTEN COSTLY

A farmer offered a fine horse at a low price would immediately become suspicious and look for defects, but, when offered seed at a figure below prevailing prices, he sometimes believes he is getting advantage of a bargain, says the Sears-Roebuck Agricultural Foundation. Bargains in both field and vegetable seeds are found only in the best seed available.

The best grades will require less seed per acre, will contain fewer weed and other foreign seeds, and will produce stronger, healthier plants. Low grade cheap seed often contains such a large proportion of dead seed and weed seeds that the price paid for the live seed content is actually considerable higher than reliable dealers ask for good seed. The contamination of the ground with weed seed is a still more serious objection.

SEARS-ROEBUCK AGRICULTURAL FOUNDATION

Quality generally should be the first consideration and price secondary when buying seed. Nor should the farmer be misled by extravagant descriptions of the seed. It is well to ask for samples just as the seed dealer would do in buying from the farmer. Seed should not be used until the farmer is sure of the variety and its adaptability, purity and vitability. The Foundation also suggests that farmers should take advantage of the protection which state laws controlling the sale of seed give to them by buying only from dealers who comply fully with those laws.

The Biggest Little Paper In Marshall County

HOLT WEEKLY NEWS

Issued Weekly From The Home Of The Biggest Co-operative Creamery In Marshall County

One Dollar Fifty Per Year In Advance

H. O. Hanson, Publisher. Holt, Marshall County, Minnesota; Friday, February 21, 1930. Volume 19; Number 43.

Counties to Get More Highway Aid

Marshall county was alloted $19,600 for its state aid roads and $70,600 from the gas tax fund for use on the new county aid roads, at a meeting of the allotment board held at the office of the Minnesota Highway department Feb. 14. The board consists of Ray Chase, the state auditor, Julius Schmahl, state treasurer, and Charles Babcock, commissioner of highways.

The total amount of state aid alloted to the counties was $5,160,000. Of this amount $1,960,000 is the regular one mill state aid fund and $3,200,000 is the counties' one third of the gas tax receipts. Total income from the gas tax for 1930 is estimated at $9,600,000, since the 3 cent tax will be in force the full year.

The minimum allotment of the gas tax fund is $24,000, since the law makes ¼ per cent the minimum. Last year the minimum was $20,625. The minimum allotment of state aid is $19,600, or one per cent. Last year the minimum was $19,543. The law provides that in making the gas tax allotments, regards shall be had to mileage of county and town roads and traffic needs and conditions of the counties.

4-H Club Members Offered Purebred Yearling Steers

4-H Club members desiring to enter a senior beef club this year will be offered an opportunity to secure purebred Aberdeen Angus steers at cost, and on terms if desired, thru a plan offered by the Marshall County State Bank of this village, the First National Bank of Thief River Falls, and the Merchants State Bank of St. Hilaire.

Ten head of choice yearling purebred Aberdeen Angus steers ranging in weight from 600 to 725 pounds, were bought from the Schermerhorn Farms at Mahnomen last week by County Agent R. M. Douglass, T. M. Thronson, of the First National Bank, Thief River Falls. These will be available to 4-H Club members.

The three banks have set aside a $100 free insurance fund for the protection of purchasers. If there are no losses during the year, this fund will be carried as a permanent fund for this kind of protection.

Any 4-H club member who is interested should consult Mr. Fricker, manager of the local bank, who has charge of the distribution of these steers in this community.

Hockey, 3-1

Last Sunday afternoon the Holt hockey team went to Strathcona to play a game with the puck chasers of that village. The boys did not go with the expectation of winning the game, as they never go near the home rink for any practice, but to repay the northern boys for the game they played here some time ago.

Those who saw the game stated that it was a much better game than the score indicates. This was only the second game for the home boys this season, the score being 3 to 1 in favor of the Strathcona boys.

Our rink has kind of gone into a stage of liquidation this week but, when it cools off again we will have one more game here.

LESSON 91

PRODUCTION: Telling "Jim, help John do the chores" is not a good way to get the chores done. When a boy has his own special work to be done, and is trained to look to his own alarm clock in the morning and the hours for doing his work, he is well on the road to success.

MANUFACTURING: When farmers have their own co-operative creameries they are manufacturers—as well as farmers—and it then becomes a part of the business of farming to understand at least the chief requirements in the manufacture of butter. Good cream is the 1st requirement.

MARKETING: Land O'Lakes system of marketing butter is to sell butter on the basis of its score as placed upon the butter by Federal-State inspectors, and to pas the creameries on the basis of this score. This system has increased the percentage of butter scoring 92 and above over 300 per cent. Before Land O'Lakes was organized, less than 25 p. c. of the butter handled scored 92 and above. Over 75 p. c. of the butter now scores 92 and above—(over 65 p. c. scoring 93 and above). The good price of butter the past few years has paid well for the extra work required.

School Notes

Speaker Here

On February 17th Mr. A. H. Crombie from the University of Minnesota spoke to the H. S. students on the subject of "Friendship." We wish that more of the parents could have enjoyed this most intellectual and helpful talk with us.

He said that when choosing a friend we should choose one who will not gossip, who will look you straight in the eye, who is honest, and trusty. He gave us many points on the kinds of friendships we should form. The way to choose the right kind of a friend was to be one.

Mr. Crombie discussed our friendships with our parents. He said that most of the quarrels and disagreements are caused by their not understanding each other, He also brought out the fact that some people think that the younger generation is not as good as the past generation but he did not agree with them on that point.

In the last part of his speech he discussed the friendships between H. S. girls and boys. A girl's or a boy's friends should not center his or her attention on one certain friend, as the result is "puppy love," which detracts the attention from one's studies.

It is the girl who acts like a lady who has the most friends and the most worthwhile boy-friends. Boys seek the friendship of girls because they need their refinement, and unless girls cultivate clean living, clean thoughts, and high ideals they cannot be they cannot be the right companions for a gentleman.

George Washington

George Washington was born February 22, 1732 at Bridges Creek in Westmoreland County, Virginia.

The house where he was born was a plain wooden farmhouse.

About three years after his birth the family moved to an estate on the banks of the Rappahannock river, nearly opposite the city of Fredricsburg in Stafford County.

When George was eleven years of age his father died and George was sent to Bridges Creek to live with his half brother and attend school, and while there acquired a fair common school education.

George Washington was known as a leader among the boys and he was liked by all who knew him.

At the age of thirteen he had written his famous rules for conduct.

When he was sixteen he and his friend George Fairfax set out for the frontier. Washington's task was to survey the boundaries of the Fairfax estates.

At the age of nineteen he was requested to carry a message to the French troops, so in October 1753 he and Christopher Gist set out on their long wearisome journey.

The information that Washington received was war. Shortly after his return he was appointed lieutenant-colonel of the single regiment that was Virginia's.

Later he got control over a small regiment that had been under the command of Braddock. The next three years he commanded Virginia's troops.

After the death of his brother he became master of Mount Vernon.

At the age of 27 he married Mrs. Martha Dandridge Curtis, a young widow, and added her estates to his own. He loved his home and was always entertaining some of his friends.

During this time the Revolutionary War had begun, so on July 3, 1775 he took command of the Continental Army of Cambridge. He had a great deal of trouble with his army and he suffered a great deal one winter at Valley Forge.

After the war he asked for peace and quiet for himself and his soldiers. After the war the People started to form a government, and again Washington came to their aid. On April 16, 1789 he left Mount Vernon and started for New York, and on April 30, 1789 he took the Oath of Office and was declared the first President of the United States. He at once started to organize the government.

He was unanimously re-elected and March 4, 1793 was inaugurated a second time. He refused a third term and went back to Mount Vernon. He spent his last days at Mount Vernon.

On December 12, 1799 he caught a cold and only two days after he was taken ill, he died (Dec. 14).

His friend, "Light Horse Harry" Lee said, "First in war, first in peace and first in the hearts of his countrymen." He was buried in the family vault at Mount Vernon.

High School

The English III Dramatic Club has been presenting programs consisting of Current Topic Speeches and interpretations of speeches by Wilson, Root, Lane, Washington, and Webster. They have also reported on Dramas.

The election of new officers every week gives everyone a chance to show and develop his executive ability. Officers elected Monday were:

President	Johnnie Doran
Vice-President	Agnes Nohre
Sec. and Treas.	Ethel Johnson

Upon discussing a sleigh ride party the question of "teams" was encountered. Our brilliant and ever ready wise cracker freshman very timidly piped the logical answer, "Use the football team."

Seventh and Eighth Grades

The seventh and eighth grades had their Valentine party on Friday afternoon. Everyone received many Valentines. A count was taken of all the Valentines received by each person. Ethel Nohre received the greatest number. At the party jokes were told and riddles asked. Lunch was served which, no doubt, the boys had been waiting patiently for.

On Friday the Hygiene class studied the rules for the prevention of colds. Apparently they did not remember them as about fifty per cent. of them appeared in school on Monday with colds.

On Lincoln's birthday they were invited to attend a program in the High School assembly. They enjoyed it very much, mostly no doubt because they missed some of their classes.

The boys are very sorry that skating must be discontinued because the weather is too mild.

Fifth and Sixth Grades

The fifth grade Geography class has taken a census of Holt. They found the population to be 186.

On Tuesday the fifth grade reading class made parrots from peanuts. They used colored tissue paper for feathers, and mounted them on perches.

The Industrial Arts class has started making handkerchief boxes and doing embroidery work.

We extend our sympathy at this time to our classmates, Gertrude and Gladys Nygaard during their bereavement.

Third and Fourth Grades

The third and fourth grades now use the "Weekly Reader." It is published each week and has a place for a chart to test each pupil's accuracy.

Last Friday, The Little Citizens League gave a play entitled "A Valentine Party." It sure was a grand and glorious success.

Miss Lanman asked one of her bright students who Henry Ford was. One pupil arose quickly and said, "He is uptown now because I saw his car go by."

First and Second Grades

During a language period, after a study of squirrels, this story was told:

A LITTLE SQUIRREL

A little squirrel was running in the woods in the winter.

A little boy caught him in a trap. He put him in the house. The little boy left the door open and the squirrel ran away.

In the morning the little boy could not find the squirrel. When he could not find it, he began to cry. He never found the squirrel again.

This week we are publishing a full page advertisement in behalf of the farmers of this community. Read the ad carefully and you will find in it some very good information. It also tells you what the 10 cent decrease in butterfat prices amounted to in our county, what happens when you buy oleomargarine, and it explains what good butter is and, why its the best food for children.

We wish to express our thanks to the local business men whose names appear in the ad and, who gave us the support for the publishing of it.

We feel proud to announce that not a single pound of this poor butter substitute "oleo" is sold in our town.

Martin Mattson of Crookston spent Tuesday here attending to a few matters of business.

Three Pioneers Gone Beyond

Mrs. Edward Erickson

Mrs. Edward Erickson of Ringbo died at her home on Sunday after a lingering illness of several months.

She leaves her husband and five children to mourn her loss as a good wife and mother.

Funeral services were held on Wednesday from the Ringbo church, Rev. O. J. Jacobsen officiating.

Martin Nygaard

Martin Nygaard, pioneer of this community, died at his home here in the village early Saturday morning, his death being caused by heart failure.

He leaves his wife, six daughters, and two sons to mourn his loss. Funeral services were held Thursday from the Nazareth Lutheran church, Rev. L. M. Redal officiating. Interment was made in the Holt cemetery.

Martin Evenson

Martin Evenson, who has been a resident of Marshall county for 43 years, and who has been ill the past two years, died Monday morning at the home of his son, Christ Evenson. Deceased war 91 years old.

Funeral services were held on Thursday, from the Rindal church near Rosewood, Rev. J. O. Jacobson officiating.

Mr. Evenson leaves three sons Christ of Holt, Carl and Emil of Montana, and two daughters, Mrs. Carl Hanson of Newfolden and Mrs. P. N. Pederson of Holt.

We extend our sympathy to the bereaved relatives in their hour of sorrow.

NOTICE!

The Dorcas Society will meet with Mrs. A. L. Carlson Tuesday evening, Feb. 25.

When Food Sours

Lots of folks who think they have "indigestion" have only an acid condition which could be corrected in five or ten minutes. An effective anti-acid like Phillips Milk of Magnesia soon restores digestion to normal.

Phillips does away with all that sourness and gas right after meals. It prevents the distress so apt to occur two hours after eating. What a pleasant preparation to take! And how good it is for the system! Unlike a burning dose of soda—which is but temporary relief at best—Phillips Milk of Magnesia neutralizes many times its volume in acid.

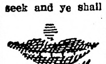
Analyzing ...YOU...

With the New Science of Syllabics

By C. J. COFFMAN
Dean of All the Enumerators

Beatrice

"Ask and it shall be given to you, seek and ye shall find, knock and it shall be opened unto you."



Full Lips of Beatrice.

It is curious that the first syllable of Beatrice, BEA, should also begin with the word beatitudes, in which is included the famous saying quoted above. Yet this first syllable of your name. BEA, literally means to ask, to seek and to desire.

Few people are blessed with a name that means more, for in your second syllable, TRICE, you indicate our modern word three or thrice. In other words, your ability to express desire in three ways, and get three answers, is again multiplied three times by that last syllable, Trice.

If Beatrice does not live long, as has sometimes been stated, it is because this ability to ask and to seek, has been lowered too closely to the animal plane. That is, it descends into her eating.

This tendency, if not checked, may cause you to "BE-AT-RICE" or starchy foods too often. There are better things than that for you, I feel sure you will find them.

To really find the highest things for your life, it is necessary for you to move everything in the direction of the spiritual. You must aspire to make more and more of your heartfelt desires take in spiritual truths.

With your fine, full lips and rounded features, you readily attract those who desire the mothering of a good woman. You may even move great poets, as the beloved Beatrice moved Dante in his writings. You have the power to make any man glad to do his utmost for your favor.

You can do your part by merely following the significance of the first two letters of your name, BE, and be his real mate.

* * *

Charlotte

Charlotte, you represent the secret sign. It is up to you to determine what kind of a sign this shall be. An old Greek rendering which uses your first syllable. CHAR, meant gladness and joy.

Adaptable Ear of Charlotte.

But no one must accuse you of lightness or frivolity, for a still more ancient use of your CHAR, indicated strength in anger. These two meanings will show you why you can make your own choice as to the use of the powers in your name.

If you feel quite modern in your attitude of mind, you can give dignity to very flapperlike costuming. On the other hand, if you love the ancient, you are capable of giving a very demure and modern effect to old ideas in dress and toiletries.

You can even display these versatilities without making any effort on your part. Anyone who can read character would know it by looking at your ear with its adaptable nature displayed too clearly.

Adaptable indeed is this ear, from deep study and scholarly attainment, to the more frivolous "life of the party." Taken all in all, you are the secret sign of attainment, Charlotte.

Your chances of success will be very much by yourself, in the way you take hold of things, or fail to.

In another day, a Charlotte came, gentle, refined and beautiful, to free her people from a tyrant. She was Charlotte Corday, of whom you have no doubt read in your French history. What she did was not nice, but it was effective.

Or, with your adaptability, you might write and emulate the success of Charlotte Bronte. With your keen observation and good expressive powers, you are quite capable of writing effectively.

Steam Drill American Idea

The steam drill was first made by J. J. Couch in Philadelphia in 1849. It was subsequently improved by Fowle of Boston and Burleigh of Fitchburg, Mass. Its first use was in drilling the Hoosac tunnel in 1869. The first patent granted for a steam shovel was to W. S. Otis of Philadelphia in 1837. However, this was not commonly used until 1880, when Count de Lesseps started the Panama canal.

Roman Orgies

The Roman Colosseum was begun by Vespasian and finished by Titus in 80 A. D. It was 612 feet long and 515 feet wide. The opening ceremonies in the huge amphitheater were conducted on a grand scale and lasted for 100 days, during which it is estimated that 5,000 wild beats were slain in the sport.

Clam Pinches Nose of Inquisitive Man

Whitneyville, Conn.—A man in this city dug a fine mess of soft clams at the seashore and left part of the spoils with a friend in Hartford. The latter noticed that one of the largest of the clams had its shells wide open. He doubted that it was alive and to verify his suspicions he placed his nose well within the gaping jaws and took a whiff. The clam came down on the inquisitive nose with such vigor that its owner screamed in pain. Before the doubting Thomas could disengage his nose that organ was badly bruised and scratched.

GIRL BANDIT GETS 5 YEARS IN PRISON

Judge Blames Her for Downfall of Companion.

Wahoo, Neb.—Leona Paulson, twenty-one-year-old girl bandit of Omaha, and Dan Prochazka, nineteen, also of Omaha, when arraigned before District Judge Hastings recently were found guilty of burglary. They were sentenced to terms in the state penitentiary and state reformatory, respectively.

Miss Paulson was sentenced to serve five years in the state penitentiary and Prochazka was sentenced to an indeterminate term of from five to ten years in the state reformatory. They were convicted on charges growing out of the robbery of the John Kilian general store at Cedar Bluffs.

In sentencing the girl Judge Hastings placed the blame for the downfall of Prochazka on her, telling her that her influence on the youth, whose instructors and Sunday school teachers appeared as character witnesses, had been largely responsible for his criminal career.

Neither Miss Paulson nor Prochazka were visibly affected by the sentence and both laughed and joked with Omaha friends and relatives who had crowded into the courtroom.

Miss Paulson was implicated only in the Cedar Bluffs robbery, in which Marshal Elmer Tracey was bound and gagged at the point of a revolver prior to the burglary. Prochazka admitted robberies at Colon and Wahoo, Neb., in November and in Logan and Dennison, Iowa.

Chained Fox Saves Family From Death

Richmond, Va.—It was an eventful day one month ago when Ed McCulloch ensnared a predatory fox in a steel trap, for the very same Sir Reynard probably saved the lives of three persons at the McCulloch home, at Spring Grove, near Bluefield, W. Va., the other day.

Pounding of the fox's body against the basement door and the rattle of his chains awakened Mrs. McCulloch, her son, George, and daughter, Miss Nannie McCulloch, in time to find the cellar in flames. George McCulloch, who is manager of the Bluefield Airport, made his escape through the smoke-filled house.

Two other members of the McCulloch household, both elderly women, were rescued from the veranda by firemen.

The fox was suffocated. His body was presented to the firemen who responded to the alarm and the skin is to be mounted and displayed at the fire station.

Mrs. McCulloch, the first to open the basement door, was met by a wall of smoke and flames.

George McCulloch stated that the rooms in which the members of the family were asleep were entirely free of smoke and that, had it not been for the animal's warning sounds, they might not have been awakened until too late.

Girl Who Slew Suitor Freed in Short Trial

Cumberland, Md.—Eula Robertson, sixteen-year-old former junior high school girl, was acquitted of a charge of manslaughter by a jury in the Circuit court recently after a half hour of deliberation. She was charged with slaying Thomas Sullivan, forty-five, a rejected suitor, in the back yard at the home of her mother, Mrs. Stella Miller, Pine avenue, early on the night of September 18.

The girl, who is a blond of modest appearance, told the jury that she had repeatedly been harassed, insulted, threatened with harm, called vile names, followed and annoyed by Sullivan, who boarded at the home of Mrs. Mildred Shipley, next door. On the evening of the tragedy, she said, after Sullivan, who had made threats during the day, while in the back yard, he sprang at her, and she shot when he was about eight feet from her.

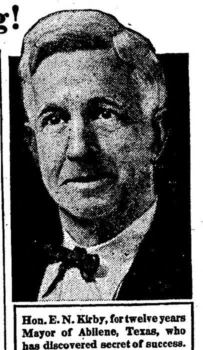
Twelve Years Mayor and Going Strong!



Hon. E. N. Kirby, for twelve years Mayor of Abilene, Texas, who has discovered secret of success.

WHEN a man who has been mayor of a big city for twelve years finds out how to live, his words are worth listening to. Ex-Mayor E. N. Kirby of Abilene, Texas, discovered the simple way to health about ten years ago (he is now 64.)

"I am now a new man, and as active as a boy," says Mr. Kirby. "I feel fine all the time and rarely have an ache or a pain, although for twenty-five years I suffered with rheumatism, and sometimes was unable to stand or walk. I would not give up my simple health discovery—no, not for five thousand dollars in gold!" That discovery was Nujol!

That's the wonderful thing about Nujol. Although it is not a medicine and contains absolutely no drugs, its harmless internal lubrication seems to make people feel better and look on the brighter side of life, whether they are old or young.

Of course you can understand why this is so: we all of us have natural poisons in our bodies that make us feel headachy, sick and low in our minds. Nujol, which is as tasteless and colorless as pure water, helps to absorb these and carry them away, easily, regularly as clock work.

Instead of drugging and irritating your body with pills, cathartics, laxatives, and other habit-forming drugs, give your body the internal lubrication which it needs, just as much as any other machine. After a few days you will be surprised at the difference in the way you feel. You can get Nujol in a sealed package in any drug store. Nujol may change your whole outlook on life. Get a bottle today and give yourself a chance to be well!

Evil company doth corrupt good manners.—Bible.

Bayer Tablets Aspirin

Needless Pain!

The man who wouldn't drive his motorcar half a mile when it's out of order, will often drive his brain all day with a head that's throbbing.

Such punishment isn't very good for one's nerves! It's unwise, and it's unnecessary. A tablet or two of Bayer Aspirin will relieve a headache every time. So, remember this accepted antidote for pain, and spare yourself a lot of needless suffering. Read the proven directions and you'll discover many valuable uses for these tablets. For headaches; to check colds. To ease a sore throat and reduce the infection. For relieving neuralgic, neuritic, rheumatic pain.

People used to wonder if Bayer Aspirin was harmful. The doctors answered that question years ago. It is not. Some folks still wonder if it really does relieve pain. That's settled! For millions of men and women have found it does. To cure the cause of any pain you must consult your doctor; but you may always turn to Bayer Aspirin for immediate relief.

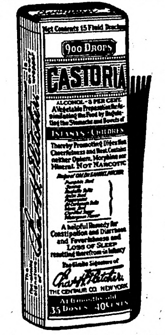
When an old man falls in love it is likely to be a hard fall.

A virtuous woman is a crown to her husband.—Psalms.

When BABIES are upset



Baby ills and ailments seem twice as serious at night. A sudden cry may mean colic. Or a sudden attack of diarrhea—a condition it is always important to check quickly. How would you meet this emergency—tonight? Have you a bottle of Castoria ready? There is nothing that can take the place of this harmless but effective remedy for children; nothing that acts quite the same, or has quite the same comforting effect on them.

For the protection of your wee one—for your own peace of mind—keep this old, reliable preparation always on hand. But don't keep it just for emergencies; let it be an everyday aid. Its gentle influence will ease and soothe the infant who cannot sleep. Its mild regulation will help an older child whose tongue is coated because of sluggish bowels. All druggists have Castoria; the genuine bears Chas. H. Fletcher's signature on the wrapper.

What the Gray House Hid

The Mystery of a Haunted Mansion

THE STORY

Hilton Hanby, prosperous New York merchant, has purchased a country place—the Gray house, near Pine Plains. Miss Selenos, a former tenant of the Gray house, warns him that the house is under a curse. Further alarming details are impressed upon Adolf Smucker, Hanby's secretary, by a man who claims to have been chauffeur for Sir Stanford Seymour, former occupant of the place. The Hanbys laugh off the warnings, as some form of practical joke. But they are shocked when they hear that the caretaker whom they have put in charge of the Gray house, a man named Kerr, has been mysteriously murdered. Hanby consults his friend Pelham. The family starts for the new home. Appleton, a clerk of Douglas and Smith, the agents from whom Hanby bought the Gray house, explains to Pelham, that a dangerous pond near the house, in which several children have been drowned, has since been filled in, but he urges Pelham to dissuade Hanby from occupying the Gray house. Hanby and Junior learn that the caretaker was known to the police as "Red Chapin" and had a bad record. Hanby considers asking Leslie Barron, long an admirer of Celia, and a husky youth, to join the house party. Mrs. Hanby declares she likes the house.

"You are wanted on the long distance, sir," she told Hanby.

"Hello!" said Hanby a few seconds later. "Yes, this is he speaking."

The voice that answered seemed far-away but very distinct. It was plainly that of an educated woman.

"I saw you at Pine Plains this afternoon. You are interested in the murder?"

"Naturally," he replied. "May I ask to whom I'm talking?"

"The name would convey nothing. Besides, it would not be the true one."

"Why not?"

"You'll see presently. Are you still determined to live at the Gray house?"

"Why not? I bought the place for that purpose."

"When you bought it, you had no idea of its history. You did not then know that it takes toll of every family inhabiting it. Happy families have gone there, but never a happy family left it."

"I am satisfied that with proper care these accidents could have been avoided."

"That's what the real estate people said when they wanted you to buy the place. They lied, naturally. All they want is their commission. Mr. Hanby, in your heart of hearts you know there is some inexplicable but dreadful curse on it."

"I am not weak-minded enough to credit such nonsense." He spoke with unusual violence. "With common precaution the accidents could have been avoided."

"Who told you so?"

"A Mr. Appleton." Hanby suddenly realized that he was an employee of the firm which sold the house. He recalled how Appleton had seemed to alter during the interview. In the beginning he had seemed to believe that something beyond human explanation hovered about the Gray house. Then he had become brisk and businesslike, and had spoken of carpenters' estimates.

"Of the firm of Douglas & Robinson?" There was contempt in the speaker's voice. "I see! Merely one of their clerks. May I ask what precaution that he could suggest would have saved the life of your unfortunate caretaker?"

"That was due to one of the vendettas common to the underworld."

Far away the musical laugh came over the wire.

"I don't see anything amusing in that," Hanby snapped.

"But you will," said the unknown. "It strikes me as very, very funny. May I ask you if you ever saw Red Chapin, Mr. Hanby?"

"No," he returned. "I don't relish that sort of thing in life or in death."

"I did. He was six feet in height, had hair of reddish brown, and carried himself very erect. This was a pose. He was pretending to be an ex-soldier. His usual habit was to slink along furtively, like the murderer he was. Now, Mr. Hanby, you are six feet in height, and you walk as erectly as ever a West Pointer did. We did not know you had engaged a man to watch the Gray house. Red Chapin was not killed because of a vendetta. He was mistaken for you!"

"I don't believe a word of it!" Hanby said violently.

"It would be safer for you and your family if you did. Next time there will be no mistake!"

"Are you threatening to kill me?"

Again the musical laugh was heard. "That would be most unwise over the telephone wires, wouldn't it? No—we are warning you that it would be safer to take your family somewhere else. Why not a trip round the world? Or there are wonderful places in Long Island. You will find Pine Plains very cold in winter."

"If this is a joke, it's a rotten one!" Hanby cried angrily.

"It is more a joke to me than to you," said the unseen woman. "I scarcely think your family will consider it a joke when you are found dead; but perhaps they may. One never knows. Well, this is your last warning."

At this point Hanby was cut off. He shouted for Junior. Junior, startled by the unusual vigor of his father's voice, came running.

"I've just had a long-distance," said his father. "It is very important that I should trace from what station it was sent. Now, Father Sherlock, do your stuff!"

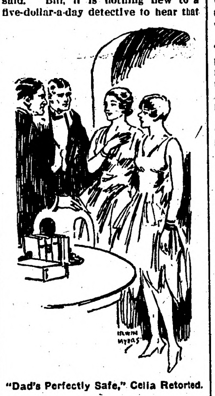
"You bet!" replied Junior eagerly.

"It was a woman who spoke—an educated woman with a youngish voice," continued Hanby. "I'm in the library with Mr. Pelham. Let me know what happens."

Pelham looked up as his friend entered. There was something different about him now. The look of indetermination was gone.

"Hil, you look as if you were about to scrap with some one, and rather enjoyed the prospect."

"That's exactly how I feel," Hanby said. "Bill, it is nothing new to a five-dollar-a-day detective to hear that his client has been threatened with violent death, so you won't be shocked to learn the sad news."



"Dad's Perfectly Safe," Celia Retorted.

"What the devil do you mean?"

"Simply this—a woman with a charming voice—Junior's trying to find where she talked from—said that Red Chapin was killed because they mistook him for me. My turn, it appears, is next on the list. All will be forgiven if I take the family to Europe or buy something on Long Island." Hanby squared his shoulders. "The old subconscious mind was right—I am in danger; but now that I know it consciously, the feeling of depression has gone. Bill, your salary is now five dollars and twenty-five cents a day. You can use the extra quarter for an insurance policy. You probably won't need any more clothes. Not a word! Dina's coming."

The two men stood up as Mrs. Hanby came into the room.

"I've never been so thrilled in my life!" she cried. "The impertinence of the creature, in assuming that your death would be a joke!"

Hanby groaned. He saw it all. Dina had picked up the telephone upstairs in her bedroom, and had listened to the whole conversation.

"Which is it to be?" he asked. "Around the world or Long Island?"

"It's going to be Pine Plains," she declared. "Hil, you didn't recognize the voice, did you?"

"Never heard it before. I could only recognize that it was the voice of an educated woman, youngish and perfectly at ease."

"It was an Englishwoman's voice," Dina asserted.

"I'm not sure. The inflection might have been put on to deceive. Moreover, lots of our actresses get into that way of talking. You'd surely think that throaty contralto of Elsie Ferguson's was English, if you didn't know that she was born in Manhattan."

"This woman was English," Dina said, "and I'll prove it. She didn't say, as we do, 'around the world.' She said 'round the world.' The English always do that. An American woman would say 'on Long Island.' If you recall it, she said 'in Long Island.' That's like the English. They say 'in the street' when we say 'on the street.' I'm certain it was an Englishwoman."

Mrs. Hanby paused as Junior came in, wearing an air of importance.

"The call came from a booth at Grand Central," he reported. "It's impossible to trace it any more than that. It wasn't long distance at all."

Hanby rang the bell for Mary Sloan.

"Why did you say I was wanted on the long-distance?" he inquired, when the maid appeared.

"The lady said, 'This is long-distance. I want Mr. Hilton Hanby.'"

When Mary had gone, Hanby turned to his wife.

"The woman must have spoken some distance from the instrument, because it sounded like a long-distance. Very carefully done! Dina, do you still want to go through with it?"

"Of course I do! Do you suppose I'll have any other woman threatening my man?"

Dina's eyes flashed. Pelham looked at her closely. It was a new Dina to him. It was a woman who would fight like a tigress to save the man who was dear to her.

Pelham knew that no word of his would sway the Hanbys. Standing together, as they invariably did, they were not to be deterred.

"As the house detective," he said, "I realize that my clients have stampeded. I only recommend that no member of this household should go up there alone. Safety in numbers! All expeditions are to be accompanied by the house detective, or he resigns. All traveling expenses incurred by the said detective must be paid for by his principals."

Celia and Leslie Barron interrupted them. Celia, at nineteen, was one of those lovely, vital children of the age, incapable of fatigue, eager for fun, gifted with much wisdom where men were concerned, and intolerant of an age where chaperonage flourished and young people went to bed early.

Leslie Barron was a silent youth. Through family influence he might some day occupy a distinguished position in his father's bank. New Haven had just lost him, but he liked college so well that he was returning for postgraduate work—which, he thought, would be less tedious than work in the elder Barron's bank. It was his aim in life to marry Celia, but of her consent he was not yet sure.

"Well, Dina darling," said Celia, putting her arm about her mother. "Why this high color and the sparkling eyes? Has dad found out that you love Bill?"

"I'm fighting mad because I listened in and found your father talking to an Englishwoman with a lovely voice."

"Dad's perfectly safe," Celia retorted. "Sometimes I think we're not modern enough. I don't know a single household where the father and mother are like you two. Wandering parents, all of them. Sometimes I think mother is a sort of ingrowing vamp."

"She is," laughed Hanby. "Whenever I try to escape, she practices her devilish wiles on me. Do you think you can stand Les for a whole summer? I want him up at Pine Plains."

"You must dilute him with other boys," she retorted. "I couldn't stand having nothing but Les all that time." Celia looked at him, laughing. "See how eagerly he snaps at your invitation!"

"I accepted last week," said Les, "as soon as Junior knew about this new house. I've made plans for a golf course already."

"Who was the lady with the lovely voice?" Celia asked.

She knew that she had interrupted an unusual conversation.

"I'm not going to give myself away before your mother and all these witnesses. Go away and dance. We will join you presently."

When she had gone, Hanby turned to Pelham.

"Dina and I don't want Celia and the others to know. Junior is different. We shan't be going for a month, and things may have explained themselves by then."

"I hope not," said Bill Pelham. "I want to earn my money."

Spot Forever Famous in American History

Boston's famous Beacon hill acquired that name in 1634 when King Charles commanded the Massachusetts colony to surrender its charter and annulled all land titles. The whole of New England suddenly found itself partitioned among a favored few in the mother country, and the thumb of a royal governor general bore down hard. At the head of a commission holding the powers of life and death over the colonists was an archbishop who had acquired considerable reputation as an heresy hunter. The colony was only four years old, but in no uncertain spirit it rebelled and soon after John Endicot's sword had slashed the red cross from the royal ensign at Salem a fort was erected at Castle Island in Boston harbor. Citizens drilled earnestly on the common and in the small towns around. As a means of quick communication a beacon was erected on the highest eminence of the capital—and that hill was named, for as long, probably as America endures.—Detroit News.

African Tribal Language

One of the greatest difficulties of missionaries in the Sudan lies in the perfect babel of languages existing among its many tribes, a great challenge to the ambitious linguist, as there are no books of any kind among them, and no teachers. Added difficulties are the various intonations of each word, a wrong tone being used often completely changing the meaning of the word. Recently it has been discovered that in one tribe seven different tones are used.

Look for Kilauea to Become Active Again

Tremendous avalanches in the almost empty crater of Kilauea, Hawaii's "live volcano," again have given hope that "Madame Pele" might return to her traditional abode.

Pele is the goddess of volcanic fire, according to Hawaiian mythology.

The pit of Kilauea has been almost bare of flowing lava for several years, though still smoking. Yet there are fire cracks all over a vast expanse of the Hawaii National park, surrounding the crater, and ample proof that red-hot lava is just beneath the surface.

The avalanches have sheared off large sections of the crater's edge, so that land where spectators and autos could stand only recently disappeared into a yawning pit more than 1,000 feet deep.

One large party of round-the-world "trippers" arrived at the volcano just in time to witness a mighty avalanche.

Every Part of Grape of Commercial Value

Salvatore Castorina, the owner and operator of an Ontario grape farm, is said to have developed his industry to the point where every part of the grape, including the prunings from the vines, is used in the manufacture of chemicals and for other purposes. Principal among these are alcohol, cream of tartar, phosphates, chicken feed and fertilizer. He says that since it has been shown that ethyl alcohol can be obtained from both the grape itself and the vine prunings, he has now entered into negotiations with one of the leading gasoline companies for the entire output of his establishment for five years. The immediate manufacture of ethyl gasoline is contemplated, and through a subsidiary concern the company will utilize the other grape chemicals.

Valuable Salvage

The rumbler, a new device to salvage brass from worn out light bulbs, is announced by the New York Edison company. The name describes the noise made in reclaiming the brass socket shells, the only parts considered worth saving. In shape it is a cylinder, of 500-bulb capacity, with two sets of steel teeth set on bars inside. While the drum revolves, they chew to bits glass and filament, which fall out of holes in the bottom, leaving the shells shiny and clean. The company reclaims about 300,000 shells yearly. Until the rumbler was devised the work was done by hand.

Ten Million Trees

More than 10,000,000 trees have been planted in Louisiana during the 1928-29 planting season, according to a statement issued by the Louisiana division of forestry. The total of hand-planted forests and wood lots in the state now stands at 28,000 acres, which represents the planting of about 25,000,000 trees.

Most of the planting has been done by lumber and paper companies on their cutover lands. The combined output of the nurseries operated by these companies is about 2,500,000 trees.—American Forests Magazine.

Lightning Got Busy

Albert Hunt tells a believe-it-or-not of a bolt of lightning at Hornell, N. Y. While he was seated in the kitchen of the Hunt home on the Hornell-Canisteo road during an electric storm, a bolt of lightning hit the chimney and traveled downward, knocking the lids from the stove and lighting a fire that had been laid for the next morning. Paper and kindling were burning briskly when the family investigated. They found no apparent damage to the chimney or the stove.

FANCY CREAMERY BUTTER

There is no Substitute for Butter

Butter Contains the Vitamins Necessary for Health and Strength

Why use substitutes and thereby help to destroy one of the chief incomes of the Dairy Farmer of the northwest?

Butter brings to Marshall County $905,170 annually. A reduction in price of 10 cents per pound means a decreased revenues of $205,620 to the farmers of Marshall County.

It is good business to EAT BUTTER if you want to promote local and state prosperity.

A SERIOUS SITUATION faces the dairy industry of the Northwest. There is much to concern every citizen of this great state in the alarming increase in the consumption of butter substitutes. Read the statement below and consider what we are doing when we use substitutes for butter. Ask your local doctor . . . who will make it stronger than the statement herewith:

Over production of dairy products? NO! Too much "Cocoanut Cow."

Cow population is not increasing in proportion with human population.

ONE-HALF OF ALL MILK IN AMERICA IS USED IN FLUID CONSUMPTION

Prices have been good this past year. Butter takes up one-third, the remainder is divided among condensed and evaporated milk, cheese, and ice cream.

Butter in stock January 1, 1928 — 43,783,000 pounds. Butter in stock January 1, 1929—82,720,000 pounds, or a surplus of 39,141,000 pounds. The total production for the year to December 1st was 1,419,230,500 pounds, an increase of 1.78 of the first eleven months in 1928.

In 1928, 288,939,058 pounds of oleomargarine were manufactured. During the first eleven months of 1929, 320,330,018 pounds were manufactured, an increase of 10.8 in production.

These figures are most illuminating. According to a statement made in the American Creamery, investigations have been conducted in Kansas, Oklahoma, South Dakota, and Wisconsin, after which it was announced that the farmers purchase 75% oleomargarine to 25% butter. A recent report from Iowa states that fifteen million pounds of oleomargarine, averaging seven pounds per capita, were consumed in that state. Minnesota has also consumed her share.

Many farmers still make their own butter. However, the dairy business is being injured every time a pound of oleomargarine is used. Forty million pounds surplus of butter should not last long if people realized the facts.

American people should use American farm products whether they live in the city or the country. When a proposition of this kind is presented in a reasonable way, they will face the situation loyally.

Perhaps the most startling evidence of the superiority of butter to oleomargarine was shown in a survey of an orphanage in the city of Rochester, New York. Seven children averaging eleven years of age were fed on a uniform diet, except that the butter fed during the first six months was replaced during the second six months by oleomargarine. During the third period of six months, butter was again furnished.

Here are the surprising results!

The average gain made by each child in the first six months when butter was used was 6.32 pounds. During the second period, when oleomargarine was used there was no gain in weight. Instead the children averaged a loss of 1.35 pounds. When butter was replaced in the third period of six months, the children exceeded the first figure showing a gain of 8.12 pounds for each child.

The superior value of butter as a food is due to certain elements which are carried in the milk fat, and which are not to be found (at least in sufficient quantity for human requirements) in other animal fats, or in vegetable oils.

The most important of these is Vitamin A, the growth-promoting factor. Vitamin A is found in such foods as the fat of the yolks of eggs, the leaves of plants, and the heart, liver and kidneys of animals, but it is in these foods in such small amounts as to be insufficient for human needs. Milk fat is the only source of human food which carries a sufficient amount of this vitamin.

Another element is iodin. The human system requires an adequate amount of iodin in the thyroid gland, as a protection against goiter. Butter is our most reliable food source of iodin.

The disease or condition known as rickets is due to a lack of sufficient calcium in the system, as well as a lack of sufficient direct sunlight on the individual. Milk fat is one of our main safeguards against rickets.

It is on these points that the superiority of butter as a health food over all other fats is based.

Neal's Mother Has Right Idea

Within a few months there will be no more feverish, bilious, headachy, constipated, pale and puny children. That prophecy would surely come true if every mother could see for herself how quickly, easily, and harmlessly the bowels of babies and children are cleansed, regulated, given tone and strength by a product which has proved its merit and reliability to do what is claimed for it to millions of mothers in over fifty years of steadily increasing use.

As mothers find out from using it how children respond to the gentle influence of California Fig Syrup by growing stronger, sturdier and more active daily they simply have to tell other mothers about it. That's one of the reasons for its overwhelming sales of over four million bottles a year.

A Western mother, Mrs. Neal M. Todd, 1701 West 27th St., Oklahoma City, Okla., says: "When my son, Neal, was three years old he began having constipation. I decided to give him California Fig Syrup and in a few days he was all right and looked fine again. This pleased me so much that I have used Fig Syrup ever since for all his colds or little upset spells. It always stops his trouble quick, strengthens him, makes him eat."

Always ask for California Fig Syrup by the full name and see that the carton bears the word "California." Then you'll get the genuine.

The Centurion came back, with a din of flapping canvas, and not waiting to be hailed, Inglepin bawled angrily:

"What is this that you do, Captain Fellowes? You have reason to know this vessel. D'you not see the colors she flies?"

"I'm not assured you have a justifiable claim to that flag's protection, sir," Fellowes answered shortly. "Captain Chater, I'm coming aboard to examine your papers."

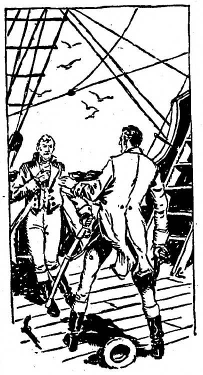
"Purty nigh piracy, I'd say," whinnied Chater. "A letter-of-marque daon't give ye the right to s'arch American vessels."

Nimrod Sopher nudged Fellowes' elbow.

"'Tis as he says," murmured the lawyer-marine. "Look to your commission, my friend. The private ship-o'-war is distinguished from the regular naval vessel by a limitation of her legal exercise of hostility and supervision."

"I didn't ask your advice," snapped Fellowes. "It comes late in the day. Mr. Spencer, you'll take the ship. Tom, call away the longboat's crew; you'll go as coxswain. Yes, Cuffee, you, too."

In the bustle of mustering the boarding party, no one on the Centurion noticed the disappearance of the Inglepins and Chater from the True Bounty's poop. Indeed, when the longboat pulled under her lee the only members of the merchantman's crew in sight were young Rorke and the helmsman, but a rope ladder had been lowered from the waist, and Fellowes climbed its jerking rungs without a thought of danger, bidding his men follow him one at a time. He reached the bulwarks' level, and vaulted carelessly to the deck—to be pounced upon by a dozen seamen, whose hairy, brown paws effectually sealed his lips. In the background Chater hovered, whinnying orders:



"Well, Naow," He Snarled, "Murdered Me, Ain't Ye?"

"That's right, men! Grab the durned pirate. I calc'late he'll do for a hostage. Here, one o' ye cut loose that ladder."

But the last word was still wet on his tongue when a roar resounded from the bulwarks. Fellowes glimpsed a gigantic black shape sailing through the air—and crashed down on the deck with the rest of the dozen as Cuffee bounced into their midst. Right and left, the negro kicked and struck, legs and arms hitting with ferocious accuracy.

Half-blinded, dazed, battered sore, Fellowes staggered to his feet, thinking to support Cuffee's charge. But a pistol cracked behind him, and he spun around in time to see Chater drawing a second weapon. And instinctively, without conscious effort, the Long Islander snatched for his own pistol, and pressed the trigger.

Chater's green eyes widened bewilderedly; the pistol slipped from his hand, his fingers clawing at his chest.

"Well, naow," he snarled. "'Murdered me, ain't ye?"

And he flopped on the deck, a touseled heap of garments, leaking rustily.

"Will you have my surgeon?" Fellowes offered perfunctorily.

"No use. But ye won't find—what ye want. She's ag'in ye. Workin' for—British. But ye'll never knaow—not for sartain."

The grotesque chin dropped, and Fellowes understood the man was dead—was surprised, too, that he should experience neither satisfaction nor compunction. But here was no time for reflection. The longboat's party, pouring over the lee bulwarks, were driving the True Bounty's crew for'ard into the fo'c's'le, no difficult enterprise, for the spirit had gone out of the ship's defenders, and they flinched under the flats of cutlasses and Tom Grogan's hearty abuse. Nimrod Sopher, tailing the boarders, of course, was wringing his hands, aghast at the sight of Chater's body.

"My dear Lion! What a misfortune! And a delicate question in admiralty law. Manslaughter—in fact, it may be murder on the high seas—"

"Captain Fellowes killed Captain Chater in self-defense, sir." Cara Inglepin's voice was low-pitched and steady, and there was color in her sun-warmed cheeks as she stepped from the cabin companionway. Ben Inglepin, who followed her, was much less master of himself. His hands shook, and his mouth wobbled nervously. The duenna, billowing after them, funereal in black, her fat hands clicking a rosary, her beady eyes roving and probing, was as phlegmatic as ever she had been in Perenha. "You saw it with me, Father?" Cara appealed to Ben. "Captain Chater fired first. A dastardly shot!"

"A most lamentable incident," quavered Ben.

Fellowes was puzzled, nonplused, by Cara's testimony for him, the more so, as Sopher twittered immediately:

"Ah, then the case is simplified! Two witnesses, two impartial witnesses, should nullify any attempt at prosecution. But I will, with your permission, Lion, proceed to take depositions, and draw them up in due order. 'Tis a safeguard—"

"We have more important work to do than accounting for the death of that scoundrel," Fellowes interrupted sternly. And for the first time he looked Cara in the eye, disturbed by the directness of her gaze, the absence of any indication of a sense of guilt. "I am under a certain embarrassment, ma'am," he continued, trying to keep his voice level, to hide from her the distraction her mere presence caused in him. "I must ask you to pledge me your word of honor you and your attendant have no documents or papers upon your persons."

"We have none," she replied readily.

"And your luggage? I am loath to search it."

"You'll find naught, sir, of any import."

"You say this upon your word of honor?"

"Upon my word of honor," she repeated haughtily. "I am, whatever my sins, not one to practice lies, sir."

Ben Inglepin hemmed fussily.

"Since we are upon the subject, Captain Fellowes," he remarked, "I will give you my word of honor that no documents, other than those of a strictly business nature, are comprised in my effects."

"Then what is the purpose of your voyage, Mr. Inglepin?"

"'Tis revealed in the ship's papers," Ben answered with new-found suavity. "A commercial venture to Spain. I am persuaded the war will soon be ended, and am anxious to establish satisfactory connections with Spanish clients against that eventuality."

Miss Inglepin abruptly gave them her back, and Fellowes conceived a suspicion that she meant by this action to divorce herself from connection with her father's assertion.

"I am compelled to doubt you, Mr. Inglepin," he returned. "I must detain you on deck while your luggage is examined."

The merchant shrugged his shoulders, somewhat light-heartedly, Fellowes imagined, his bearing similar to that he had displayed at Chater's house. But the realization that his task would not be easy only stiffened the Long Islander's determination.

"Cuffee," he called, and when the negro approached: "You are responsible for these three people. Keep them here until I release you."

"Yah, Mars'r Fellowe'. Yo' look fo' lettah?"

"Yes." Some quality in Cuffee's tone made Fellowes expectant. "Why?"

"Yo' wait fo' see, Mars'r. Yo' no fin' him lettah below, Cuffee make juju fo' him."

Going through the True Bounty's clearance papers, manifest and log, and ransacking the contents of Chater's desk and locker, Fellowes was disposed to favor the employment of all the juju at Cuffee's command. After Ben Inglepin's cabin had been searched with equal unsuccess, he called in the Centurion's hands to hunt for loose floorboards or concealed wall closets; and they tore the cabin to pieces—quite fruitlessly.

Frustrated at each point he assailed, Fellowes was striding the fo'c's'le deck, cudgeling his wits for some nook or cranny he hadn't attempted, when Tom Grogan accosted him.

Tit for Tat

"Ah," said the elderly tramp, giving his brimless hat a twirl, "education is a wonderful thing in our line of business."

"Why, whatever good is education to us?" asked the younger road walker.

"I'll tell you," was the reply. "I was in Beverly one morning and knocked at the door of a tidy little bungalow. When the lady of the house came out to see who it was I quoted a little Shakespeare."

"Well?"

"An' she replied with a little bacon."

The Foods We Eat

A commission man, "shopping" in New York city found spinach from Mexico, honeydew melons from South Africa, fresh almonds from the Holy land, new potatoes from Florida, green peas and asparagus from California, butter from Denmark, eggs from China, meats from New Zealand and Argentina.

Would Have Runnymede Kept as National Park

The committee set up by the premier to examine the question of national parks will find that all sorts of places are put forward as possible parks. The latest is Runnymede, which is probably the most famous meadow in the world. Runnymede itself is not, of course, big enough for a national park, but it has been suggested that it might be made the nucleus of one. In any case, it is said, it should be preserved as a sort of place of pilgrimage. It is not certain, however, that the present Runnymede is actually the place where King John signed the Magna Charta, over 700 years ago. The course of the Thames has changed a good deal since then, and the old Runnymede may now be under water. Even now Runnymede is open to the public, but various people have rights in it, and it is felt that the situation would be more satisfactory if the land were taken over by a body like the National trust.—London Mail.

A Shining Shower

President Saunders Norvell of the Remington Arms company at an advertising men's banquet in New York ended a eloquent address with a series of epigrams that was like a shower of fireworks:

"Bite off more than you can chew, then chew it.

"The success of the automobile business is due to the automobile advertisements, which sold cars for seven years before the manufacturers knew how to make them.

"Advertise truthfully. Lies don't pay. The Golden Rule is what brings in the gold."

Shot Rare Bird

L. M. Lewis, of Bremerton, Wash., recently shot a rare bird, variously classified as an immature ostrich or a dodo. Ornithologists at the University of Seattle identified it as a Peale's falcon, an uncommon bird in North America.

First Shorthand

Modern shorthand dates from the patent granted on July 26, 1588, for fifteen years, to Dr. Timothy Bright, resident physician at St. Bartholomew's hospital, London, which licensed him "to teache, imprynte, and publishe, or cause to be taughte, imprynted, and published, in or by character not before this time commonlye knowne and used by other oure subjects." In the same year Bright published a description of the system in his book, "Characterie. An arte of shorte, swifte and secret writing by character."

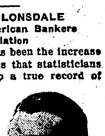
PHENOMENAL GAIN IN TRUST SERVICES

By JOHN G. LONSDALE
President American Bankers Association



John G. Lonsdale

SO phenomenal has been the increase of trust business that statisticians are unable to keep a true record of its advancement. There are now something like 3,500 active trust departments in banks in America, while in 1900 only 165 active trust departments had been established.

In becoming the custodians or the guardians of the property of others, bankers assume what has been fittingly described as one of the "most exalted human relationships ever created by law." They become at once a big brother, a big sister, an advisor, or a confessor, sworn so to conduct themselves that clients will be won to them by their ability and integrity.

Thousands of little children have received an education and have been started off right in life through the trust department's safe keeping and guidance of the family estate, numberless widows have been protected from merciless stock swindlers, many thousands of business men have been relieved of troublesome details in the conduct of their business through the creation of a living trust and still others have safeguarded their business enterprises through life insurance trusts.

The favorable reaction of the public toward trust department service is not accidental. It may be traced jointly to the growing intelligence of the American people in financial affairs and to advertising to the world at large the merits of trust services. Advertising used in a sensible, judicious way is necessary, a power that has accomplished much good for humanity.

Among the detailed services, rendered by a trust department the one that seems to be winning favor the fastest is the life insurance trust. Life insurance is the quickest known way of creating an estate. In reality it affords the possessor the opportunity of setting up a positive monetary safeguard for his family and then paying for it on the installment plan.

A married man is not fair to his family if he fails to carry life insurance. I would say to the young man, "Buy insurance before you buy the ring," and to the young woman I would say, "Marry no man so thoughtless as to scoff at life insurance."

MODERN EDUCATION REVERSES OLD IDEAS

Business Institutes Use the Plan of Getting People to Think Rather Than Merely to Learn.

There is one general principle at the basis of all good teaching and it is that a person learns more readily by assimilating the experiences which he himself encounters than in any other way, says Harold Stonier, National Educational Director of the American Institute of Banking. This institute is the educational section of the American Bankers Association through which 35,000 bank men and women are receiving scientific instruction in their chosen business.

"The most advanced people in teaching today are emphasizing the importance of activity on the part of the student," he says. "In the schoolroom of former days we often heard such phrases as, 'Be still,' 'Learn by heart,' 'Don't do that,' 'What does the book say?' The newer education asks, 'What do you think?,' 'What was your reaction to that experiment?,' 'What did you discover?,' 'What reasons have you for answer?'

The New School Calls for Action

"The 'expressing' school is taking the place of the repressing and listening school. The classroom is becoming an open forum, a studio of self-expression, a place of mental growth. The modern concepts of education are personal experimentation, individual investigation, critical discussion and creative self-expression. The pupil really learns only as he is able to assimilate the new meanings of facts and principles with his previous experiences. Activities therefore constitute the pivotal force around which are grouped the new factors in education. The primary responsibility of the teacher is to furnish a constant stream of activities which will afford the stimulating urge to mental growth.

"Education is a process of experiencing, and the program of the institute is so arranged as to give the greatest opportunity to gain by such experience. Through this we develop the art of thinking. Thinking has been described as the ability to handle experience and to bring it to bear on a problem. Effective thinking arises when we are presented with the choice of conduct. Our previous experiences become helpful as we marshal them and bring them to bear upon the matter of our choice."

The students in the American Institute of Banking by reason of the fact that they continue to go on about their employment in banks while taking the banking association's study courses have an opportunity to combine learning with practical thinking and action.

Parent-Teachers Work Classes At Thief River

Classes in Parent - Teachers work are to be held in Thief River Falls March 5th and 6th, sponsored by the National Congress of Parents and Teachers with Mrs. R. C. Roe, national secretary, Washington, D. C., leader.

Everyone in the districet interested in the Parent-Teachers work is most cordially invited to attend. Wednesday, March 5th, at six o'clock there will be a fifty cent dinner and meeting at Hotel Evelyn, a meeting at the Lincoln High School at 8 o'clock. On Thursday the meeting will be held in the Commercial Club rooms at two o'clock in the afternoon. These meetings will be free to all and it is hoped that a large number throughout the district will attend.

If possible, make reservation for the dinner with Mrs. W. E. Dahlquist, Thief River Falls, but if you decide the last minute to come, be sure and be at the hotel for the dinner. It is the object of these meetings to more thoroughly acquaint people with the work of this association. Opportunity will be given to discuss any school problems you may have.

The Ringbo Rifle Club will give their first benefit dance of the season here at Holt tomorrow night at the Community Hall. Come and have some fun.

Share in the earnings of this fast growing chain store. A warrent to purchase common stock is FREE with each share of 7 per cent. Preferred. Gamble Stores.

T. O. Dovre of Thief River spent Monday here visiting with old friend and attending to some business matter.

Monday evening a heavy sleet storm hit here, turning to snow on Tuesday, blocking up everything for a few days.

John Gullingsrud and family from T. R. Falls visited at the Walter Larson home Sunday.

W. Larson and family from Newfolden visited at the Hans Larson home Thursday evening.

Town Election

Township elections will be held on Tuesday, March 11, throughout Minnesota, this date being the second Tuesday in March. There will be no village elections on that date as in former years, the state village election date being changed to the first Tuesday in December. All village officers will hold office until the election next December, according to A. G. Lundgren, county auditor. Many Marshall county people were of the belief that the township election and annual meeting dates were changed to the same date as the village election, but this is erroneous, said the auditor. At the annual meetings of the town boards on March 11, taxes for the year will be levied and general township government and improvements will be decided upon.

Hans Lockstad of Newfolden who is taking the census of the business places in the county has spent a couple days here enumerating in the village.

R. A. Werner and family and H. O. Hanson and family were entertained at the H. T. Lorson home last Thursday evening.

Ole Nygaard arrived here last Sunday from Fort Bliss, El Paso, Texas where he is in training in the Army. He will spend about two months with his folks here.

Mrs. Axel Nelson returned to her home at Alsen, N. D., on Monday after spending a week here. She was called home on account of the death of her father, Martin Nygaard.

LESSON 91
PRODUCTION: Telling "Jim, help John do the chores" is not a good way to get the chores done. When a boy has his own special work to be done, and is trained to look to his own alarm clock in the morning and the hours for doing his work, he is well on the road to success.
MANUFACTURING: When farmers have their own co-operative creameries they are manufacturers—as well as farmers—and it then becomes a part of the business of farming to understand at least the chief requirements in the manufacture of butter. Good cream is the 1st requirement.
MARKETING: Land O'Lakes system of marketing butter is to sell butter on the basis of its score as placed upon the butter by Federal-State inspectors, and to pas the creameries on the basis of this score. This system has increased the percentage of butter scoring 92 and above over 800 per cent. Before Land O'Lakes was organized, less than 25 p. c. of the butter handled scored 92 and above. Over 75 p. c. of the butter now scores 92 and above—(over 65 p. c. scoring 93 and above). The good price of butter the past few years has paid well for the extra work required.

School Notes

Editorship

The honorable position of Editorship of our school notes has been transmitted from the Juniors to the Sophomores.

The Editors are as follow:

Editor-in-Chief	Doris Leiran
Editor of High School	Emma Furr
7th and 8th grades	Richard Michaelson
5th and 6th grades	Anna Swenson
3d and 4th	Ruth Olson
1st and 2d grades	Ferne Peterson

High School

The English I class is reading Ivanhoe.

The past week the English II class began studying Julius Cæsar.

The English III class will have a debate Friday on the subject: "Resolved, That the Eighteenth Amendment to the Federal Constitution should be repealed."

New officers for the Dramatic Club in English III were elected as follows:

Walter Steinhauer	President
Alice Hall	Vice-President
Oscar Fosholm	Sec. and Treas.

The six weeks examinations will be held the latter part of this week.

Watch the reports for the Honor Roll next week.

Repairs have been made on the well, as there was no water to be had on Tuesday forenoon.

The General Science class have been studying a very interesting phase of the course, which is Electricity.

The Geometry class has now finished the study of circles.

The Algebra class has been studying factoring under seven possible types.

Mr. R. Werner was a visitor of the High School last Friday.

Ruth Olson has been absent from school this week on account of sickness.

Seventh and Eighth Grades

Mary Margaret Olson is on the sick list this week.

The seventh and eighth grades secured new reading books this week.

Last week the boys made it a point to have wet feet every day, so the Janitor would have more work.

Fifth and Sixth Grades

In the last Self-Testing Drill the sixth grade made a rating of nine. They are proud to see the line on the Progress Chart go up.

We had three little visitors on Friday; namely, Estelle Redal, Lois Hanson, and Buddy Hanson. We are glad to have little visitors on Friday.

We are disappointed to see the snow again as we were already starting to plan our windmills and kites for Spring.

Third and Fourth Grades

The third graders have been making Eskimo booklets which they have finisht after a thoro study of Eskimos

The 3d grade reading club met Friday.

The 4th graders have drawn maps of Minnesota showing the distribution of the population.

First and Second Grades

The first and second grades are competing in what they call a Brick Wall contest, the first grade being represented by a sparrow and the second grade by an eagle. In this contest, each day that everyone is present in either grade, a brick is added to their wall. The first grade pupils have been rather slow masons, as they haven't any bricks on their wall and the second grade has five.

The first grade pupils have shown that spring is really quite near, as they have brot in pussy willow buds that have already burst open.

In addition to their booklets on George Washington, the second grade pupils have decorated their sand table with what they call the flag and soldier scene.

They have also added a new rule to their health chart which is: "Wash your hands before each meal."

BANKING FINDS THE WAY TO SAFER ERA

By FRANK W. SIMMONDS,
American Bankers Association

In considering the banking situation throughout the country, the fact should be kept in mind that while one bank in ten failed during the past eight years, it is far more important that nine banks out of ten, operating in the same general field, serving the same communities and meeting almost identically the same problems, weathered the economic storm of readjustment successfully. This achievement cannot be ascribed to any element of luck, but rather to consistent adherence to sound banking principles and profitable practices. Through worthy and efficient management they met the issues and problems confronting them, squarely and successfully.

Banking is regarded as the keystone of our entire business structure, hence bank failures are rightly regarded as intolerable public calamities that must absolutely be prevented. The three major objectives of all inter-bank organizations, whether local, county, district, state or national, are to make banking safer for all concerned and, through increased efficiency in bank management and supervision, to lessen or eliminate all forms of losses so that greater rewards may accrue to banking and better service to the public. There is definite evidence throughout the country of a strong and growing spirit of cooperation among bankers and banking organizations, which is resulting more and more in strengthening the work of all.

Clearinghouse associations among banks in city, county or district groups undoubtedly constitute the chief line of defense against bad banking practices. They have demonstrated that they are the principal factor in bringing about reformation in banking regulations, improvements in banking methods and the observance of sound banking principles. For many years the primary purpose of a clearinghouse association was the clearance of checks, but today it is the clearance of banking ideas and the solution of banking problems. Clearinghouses supply the local machinery essential for setting up and putting in practice necessary standards and uniformities. There are now 435 clearinghouse associations in cities, towns, counties and groups of counties in the United States.

Men today are more intelligently group-minded than ever before. Banking is combining the best elements of competition with sound group action. By virtue of this combination, individual thought has much wider possibilities of expression. In general, group action has not stifled but has stimulated individual thinking and initiative. Better inter-bank organization and relationships afforded by clearing houses would have undoubtedly saved many institutions that have suffered failure in the past. The clearing house activities of the American Bankers Association are conducted for the purpose of encouraging ever widening cooperation along fundamental principles and practices among banks through clearinghouse associations. Bankers in every city, county or district can, through the agency of a clearinghouse, promote better, safer and more profitable banking and also serve their communities better.

There never was a time when successful bankers were so alert to the value of team work for putting the entire banking structure in prime condition. Sound bank management is the order of the day. Constructive cooperation is more than a sentiment; it is an economic necessity, a matter of enlightened self-interest, and successful bankers more and more are utilizing the agency of constructive group action in developing and establishing necessary standards and uniformities in banking practices. Each year banking is becoming more of a science and attaining higher professional standards.

OBITUARY

Martin Andreason Nygaard was born in Norerehav, Norway, Oct. 8, 1875 of parents Andreas Hanson and Carrie Halvorson. In Nordrehav his boyhood days were spent being both baptized and confirmed in the Nordrehav Lutheran church.

On September 8, 1899 he was united in marriage to Thea Olson of the same place. From there they moved to Hauge, Norway where the husband was employed by a manufacturing concern. The made their home in Hauge until the year 1907 when they joined the immigration movement to America which was then so prominent. After reaching this country they went directly to Joyce, Iowa, where they made their home for a year and a half.

In the year of 1909 they moved from Iowa to Holt where they have made their home ever since and are ranked among the early settlers of this community who worked hard in the days of their pioneer life.

This family has suffered a great deal. Poverty has come into the home and death has also made its presence in the past. But the heaviest blow of all was the passing away of the cherished husband and father who has been faithful in many things. He passed very suddenly on Saturday Febr 15. Martin Nygaard leaves to mour his loss his wife and eight children, namely: Anna Nelson and Aagot Severson of Alsen, N. Dak.; Ole, who is in Army; Martha Sorum of Barnesville; Theodor, Margaret, Gertrued and Gladys all at home.

He also leaves two brothers, Abraham and Chris Nygaard.

Hannah Erickson was born in Kivafjord, Norway, July 25, 1875. She passed away at her home here Sunday Feb. 16 after a lingering illness.

In 1899 she was united in marriage to Edward Erickson, and to this union six children were born all of whom are left with their father to mourn the loss of a good and faithful wife and mother.

She leaves a brother at Valley City, N. Dak.

"Avoid Needless Losses," Says Co-Operative Leader

"The continued wheat price depression is bringing needless loss to thousands of Minnesota Farmers and their communities", says L. R. Roberts, Treasurer of the Minnesota Wheat Pool. Mr. Roberts, who says that the selection of W. J. Kuhrt as General Manager of the Northwest Grain Association and the establishment of organization offices of that Association at 600 Flour Exchange, Minneapolis, marks an important step forward in the establishment of a farmer owned and farmer controlled system of grain marketing through from the farm to the miller, further says the wheat price situation: "The farmer who sells his wheat of grade lower than No. 2 is from four to seven cents cash out of pocket as compared to what he could today receive as an advance from the Minnesota Wheat Pool acting as a loaning intermediary between the Federal Farm Board and the farmer. Country prices on No 1 and No. 2 fully reflect the prices paid by the Stabilization Corporation, Minneapolis, but all lower grades are being bid in at a sacrifice to the farmer. The Federal Board loan values on Nos. 3, 4 and 5 Hard Spring are, respectively, 4, 5 and 7 cents above the local card of the average Red River Valley point for February 21st. This means that the farmer having 1000 bushels of No. 3 hard spring wheat on hand can get a Farm Board advance on it amounting to $40.60 more than its sale value on the local market.

"The procedure of securing a loan," says Mr. Roberts, "is simple: Take your warehouse receipt to your local bank, ask for the Federal Farm Board advance, fill out the required agreement and the money is yours. The Federal Farm Board protects against loss."

Mr. and Mrs. Sam Lor[illegible] entertained several of their friends at a whist party on Saturday evening.

—26—

"Cuffee'll have a word with ye, Cap'n."

"About what?"

"I dunno, but he's mortal itchin' for it. Wants to know can he bring his pris'ners for'ard?"

Recalling the negro's talk of juju, Fellowes' interest was awakened.

"Tell him to come along, Tom," he directed.

And presently, Cuffee shepherded the Inglepins and the duenna to the fo'c's'le.

"Him big debbil—" Cuffee nodded to Ben Inglepin—"sweat plenty ebery time yo' walk on fo'c's'le, Mars'r."

"Yes?" Fellowes prompted.

"Cuffee make juju, Mars'r. Juju tell Cuffee him lettah been on fo'c's'le."

Fellowes look sidewise at Inglepin. There were tiny beads of moisture on the merchant's forehead, despite the evening cool. Cara, however, seemed serenely indifferent, and the duenna was content to click away at her beads.

"Sir, this is nonsense," protested Ben. "Will you permit a superstitious negro to incommode persons, who, for no fault of their own, happen to be in your power?"

"Where are these papers concealed?" Fellowes demanded sternly.

"Papers? Why, you have had access to all we possess."

Cara Inglepin turned away with a faint sigh. Cuffee, wandering softly about the deck, touched various objects with his hands, his eyes, close-lidded, darting snakily at the merchant's face, his lips moving in a guttural refrain:

No him bowsprit!
No him capstan!
No him pawl!
No him hawse-pipe!
No him—

"Oh, my aunt, Mars'r Fellowe'! Him lettah in anchor-stock!"

Fellowes stared unbelievingly, but the negro pointed to Inglepin's gaping consternation while with his other hand he pulled out a plugged section in the end of one of the balks of timber that stocked the heavy bow-anchors.

"My God!" exclaimed Ben.

Cara's face was devoid of feeling, but she stepped forward beside her father, squarely in front of Fellowes.

"I knew not its hiding place," she said icily, "since I refused longer to be concerned with secrecy. But 'twas I, no less than my father, who drew up that paper, and secured the signatures. And I am responsible for having interested Lord Wellington and the Prince Regent's ministers—"

Ben Inglepin emitted a groan of despair.

"Oh, have done, have done," he begged. "Are we not sufficiently exposed to this man, who would ruin us? I tell you, Cara, he and your uncle will see us hung!"

"And if we merit it, shall we complain?" she retorted. "We have made a cast, Father. Let us not weep for having lost."

From the cavity in the anchor-stock Cuffee produced a thick roll of oiled silk. It was on Fellowes' tongue to tell the negro to toss it in the sea, but Joshua's voice rang in his ears, Joshua's face, so absurdly like Ben's, appeared before his eyes. Hate! If you'll only hate enough! And after all, he had been given a trust.

"Hand it here, Cuffee," he said in a voice that was strange to him.

The scroll, inside the covering, was written in a bold, free script, and the import of its message took his breath away:

> To the Right Hon. The Lord Liverpool, K. G., H.M.'s Prime Minister.
> My Lord:
> Your petitioners, political representatives of the Federalist Party in the United States, and in especial, those sections of the Party established in New England and New York, do represent and make manifest—

Fellowes flipped through the pages to the end. Page after page of names. Names of senators, of representatives, of state officials, of those high in commerce, in the law and in the church.

Cara Inglepin nodded sadly, partly to herself, partly to him.

"That is the Federalist party," she said. "And they are Americans, Captain Fellowes, no more than Americans who disagree with you."

Fellowes gritted his teeth.

"They are traitors," he disputed her. "Your errand was treason of the blackest."

Ben Inglepin cried out in agony:

"Not treason! No, no! We want peace. Oh, d—n Jos!"

"Let us damn nobody, Father," Cara interrupted. "Treason or no, we need not be ashamed, for what we did we intended honorably."

She had pluck, this girl, Fellowes owned, but resolutely he curbed the admiration she inspired, bowing coldly, implacably.

"If it please you, ma'am! I must remove you all to the Centurion. Will you show the men your luggage?"

She smiled, and he had an uncomfortable sensation that she pitied him.

"It does not please me, sir; but I'll be a docile prisoner. Come, Father!"

She spoke in Portuguese to the duenna, and the three walked past him, Ben Inglepin with dragging feet, Cara lightly under the weight of her greatcoat, the duenna flashing a quizzical stare from her jetty eyes. Surely, the fat woman mocked him! But why? And why should Cara Inglepin, who shortly must answer at the bar to a charge of high treason, pity him who had taken her? Ah, and why should he ask himself such questions? What did they matter? He had won; he had his vengeance. He and Joshua would crush these people as—as—Cuffee's twenty-four-pound shot should crush the Badger.

Yes, crush the Badger, crush Collishawe, crush these people—crush them all. All! He must hate her the more vigorously because she smiled, because she pitied him, because she knew how desperately he tried to hate.

He stifled a groan.

"A fire under each hatch, Cuffee," he ordered. "I can't spare hands for another prize—not with the Badger to fight."

Cuffee crowed delightedly.

"Dis Chater ship him make plenty big fire. Oh, my aunt, we see him too long time off. Whoosh! Him buhn to sky. Yah, yah, yah!"

So hatred burned, Fellowes thought, annihilating, all-consuming, destroying even the soul that kindled it.

CHAPTER XI

Stormy Seas

Silence cloaked the Centurian as a twist of flame flickered up from the True Bounty's for'ard hatch. There was something portentious in the spectacle which impressed the roughest sailors. This was no ordinary act of destruction. It partook of the character of an execution, the condign punishment of a guilty fabric. The ship was dying, as her master had died, as perhaps her owners should die, in retribution for the offense of which she had been a part.

The Inglepins, standing apart on the brig's poop, watched with a kind of sorrowful fascination. When the masts of the dying ship crashed overside, and a murmur of comment broke the silence on the Centurion, Cara caught her breath and Ben Inglepin's lips framed a curse.

Fellowes, eyeing his prisoners uneasily, fancied there was something symbolical for them in the True Bounty's fate, but the punishment of the ship would be accomplished in much simpler fashion than the punishment he must see dealt to them. Soon, very soon, the charred remnants of the True Bounty would be rent asunder, and she would cease to be. But for Cara and her father remained all the long-drawn agony of public disgrace, the rancor of factional hostility, the torment of the law's delays. Surely, a punishment sufficient to satisfy any hatred, even Joshua's. Yes, even his own—except that it didn't. Perhaps nothing ever would. At the moment, he realized, he hated Chater dead as much as he had Chater living.

Ben Inglepin's voice, fretfully insistent, pierced his reflections.

"Captain Fellowes! Have you not some corner to which my daughter may retire? 'Tis insufferable she should be kept on deck."

"I have arranged that she and her attendant shall occupy my cabin," Fellowes interrupted. "You, sir, may have the quarters of my second lieutenant. You will be restricted to the after-cabin and the poop. Am I plain, sir?"

"Sufficiently," Ben assented, flushing. "May we go below, then?"

"Within the limits prescribed," rejoined Fellowes.

Turning on his heel as the Inglepins left the poop, he saw that the True Bounty was gone. Only the frosty glimmer of the stars relieved the darkness.

How Poppy Became Symbol

There is some confusion and misunderstanding in regard to the use of the poppy as a symbol, by the American Legion and the Veterans of Foreign Wars. The poppy was first sold in this country for war relief before the armistice, when Mme. Guerin disposed of millions of them which had been made by French orphans. The Veterans of Foreign Wars bought the last of her stock. In 1920 the American Legion had a national poppy sale, but in 1921 had a daisy sale. The Veterans of Foreign Wars then had a poppy drive. Later the Legion used the poppy. Both organizations now sell poppies near Memorial day for raising funds for needy veterans, and it seems that this flower has found a place in the American heart along with the red cross upon a white field.

Interior Department

A grade school class was discussing the various departments of government.

The teacher called on a lad who had not been attentive.

"James, who is the head of the interior department?"

"I think the stomach," replied the lad.

Slick Trader

An American trader removed the winding keys from alarm clocks and sold them for 500 coconuts each to San Blas Indians. They believed the clocks had magic so long as they ticked—so he did a driving business winding the clocks at one coconut a day.

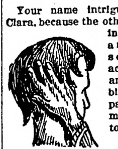
Analyzing ...YOU...

With the New Science of Syllabics

By C. J. COFFMAN

Dean of All the Enumerators

Clara



Clara's Forehead and Fingers.

Your name intrigues me a little, Clara, because the other day in searching through a very ancient manuscript, I came across some Latin and Greek syllables, which made part of your name mean to dig open, to pierce.

Another part of your name indicated a banquet and a good time.

But the startling part was to find another section, RA, meaning adversity, affliction and calamity. This apparent contradiction is borne out in your life by your high forehead and your short fingers, a rare combination.

Now remember, none of these things are fates or destinies. They are influences only, and by telling you about them in advance, I can help you to avoid them.

Besides all this you must remember that the Latin root for Clara is CLARUS, to make clear or transparent, and to free from impurities. This is like our word clarify.

Nevertheless, you can well afford to look cautiously at the tendency of the lives of some other Claras, and their possible outcomes, such as Clara Morris, an actress of former days, and our present Clara Bow, today's screen favorite.

Your best career is probably a dramatic one, but in your case it will require a great deal of balance to maintain happiness. Do not let personal ambition run away with both your heart and your head.

Thus, by seeing the deeper things within you, you will discover your power and strength, before being compelled to apply them to the world at large.

If you can be really happy in your work, you can spread lots of happiness, both for yourself and others, but you will find it very difficult to make progress if your heart is heavier than the load you have to carry.

* * *

The Dorothy Type of Foot.

You have so much to be thankful for, Dorothy, so much to tilt up your pretty little nose, that you may even get a bit uppish.

In the first place your very first syllable, DOR, gives you quite a superiority complex, because DOR means generation or age. It makes you quite the important one of your generation, and inclined to be the favorite of your family.

A study of the life of Dorothy Mackaill, motion picture star, would bear out these statements quite completely.

If you make good use of your second syllable, OTH, you can have the advantage of the everlasting youth implied in your first syllable. For this OTH means a sign or token, and will point the way for you in any direction that you set your heart on going. Only do be careful not to let your splendid self-respect become pride or conceit.

Your cute little foot, short, with a high instep, will take you far. It can be a journey of light and dancing steps, according to the way you use that first syllable, DOR.

Remember that this syllable DOR is in the word adore.

This letter Y makes the last syllable. Its meaning is "and." With you it indicates the idea in the word "plus," unlimited additions, unlimited room for expansion. Whichever way you set your ideas on the generation of new things, coupled with the sign or token of your life, your "pluses" will go on adding themselves.

Your sign or token is a rigid self-respect, surrounded by kindliness, and carefully kept on this side of egotism. That is not too preachy, is it?

Growth of Deers' Antlers

Deer shed their antlers once a year, between January and March. When the antlers are dropped, the roots or pericles exposed are rough disks of bone belonging to the frontal bone of the skull. After a week or so this is covered by the dark brown skin of the head and then the new antler begins to develop. It takes about four months, or until about August, for the new antlers to attain full growth.

Building Character

A Kansas City school bulletin sets forth that "good character is caught rather than taught." This is a catchy phrase and rings out, but it is only true in a degree. Good character is taught in most homes; and it is also "caught" there—by example.—Exchange.

Greatest of All Pleasure

Mental pleasures never cloy; unlike those of the body, they are increased by repetition, approved of by reflection and strengthened by enjoyment.—Colton.

Backward Peoples

Figures published in the Church Missionary Outlook give the infant mortality rate of Kashmir, India, as 500 in 1,000. Persia is said to have the same rate, while Egypt has 300 a 1,000. While a great deal is being done to promote child welfare, workers find that distrust on the part of the natives is the greatest obstacle to overcome. In Egypt the rumor got about that bathing the babies was really Christian baptism. Weighing infants is looked upon with deep suspicion.

This Little Girl Got Well Quick

"Just after her third birthday, my little daughter, Connie, had a serious attack of intestinal flu," says Mrs. H. W. Turnage, 217 Cadwalder St., San Antonio, Texas. "It left her very weak and pale. Her bowels wouldn't act right, she had no appetite and nothing agreed with her.

"Our physician told us to give her some California Fig Syrup. It made her pick up right away, and now she is as robust and happy as any child in our neighborhood. I give California Fig Syrup full credit for her wonderful condition. It is a great thing for children."

Children like the rich, fruity taste of California Fig Syrup, and you can give it to them as often as they need it, because it is purely vegetable. For over 50 years leading physicians have recommended it, and its overwhelming sales record of over four million bottles a year shows it gives satisfaction. Nothing compares with it as a gentle but certain laxative, and it goes further than this. It regulates the stomach and bowels and gives tone and strength to these organs so they continue to act normally, of their own accord.

There are many imitations of California Fig Syrup, so look for the name "California" on the carton to be sure you get the genuine.

New High in Philanthropy

Gifts to philanthropy in the United States during 1929 reached the tremendous total of $2,450,720,000, or an increase of $120,120,000 over 1928, the previous highest year, according to the John Price Jones corporation of New York.

Drugs Excite the Kidneys, Drink Water

Take Salts at First Sign of Bladder Irritation or Backache

The American men and women must guard constantly against kidney trouble because we often eat too much rich food. Our blood is filled with acids which the kidneys strive to filter out; they weaken from overwork, become sluggish, the eliminative tissues clog and the result is kidney trouble, bladder weakness and a general decline in health.

When your kidneys feel like lumps of lead; your back hurts or the urine is cloudy, full of sediment, or you are obliged to seek relief two or three times during the night; if you suffer with sick headache, or dizzy, nervous spells, acid stomach, or if you have rheumatism when the weather is bad, begin drinking lots of good water and get from your pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Salts. Take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys may then act fine.

This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for years to help flush and stimulate clogged kidneys, to neutralize the acids in the system so they no longer are a source of irritation, thus often relieving bladder disorders.

Jad Salts is inexpensive, cannot injure, makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink and belongs in every home, because nobody can make a mistake by having a good kidney flushing any time.

A man may suffer untold privations, but a woman always tells them.

Everything antique seems to be valuable except antique clothes.

What this Doctor did for Humanity

As a young man the late Dr. R. V. Pierce, practiced medicine in Pennsylvania and was known far and near for his great success in alleviating disease. Finally he moved to Buffalo, N. Y., and put up in ready-to-use form, his GOLDEN MEDICAL DISCOVERY, the well known tonic for the blood. This strength builder is made from a formula which Dr. Pierce found most effective when in private practice.

It aids digestion, acts as a tonic and enriches the blood—clears away pimples and annoying eruptions and tends to keep the complexion fresh and clear. All druggists. Tablets or liquid.

LIGHTS of NEW YORK

By GRANT DIXON

Severe Test

One more towering hotel is nearing completion in the neighborhood of Pennsylvania station, and the work of training the staff has begun. At the moment telephone operators are being chosen. An applicant is asked if she is courteous at all times, and if it appears that she is, she gets probationary employment. Then a professional annoyer goes to work.

For days he hounds the operator, calling from various rooms and making absurd and ill-mannered demands. He will ask for Circle 5920, get his connection, and then angrily flash the hotel operator. "Having a good time talking to the boy friend?" he will roar. "Why don't you keep your wits on your job? I told you to get me Circle 5923."

If the operator replies, "You did not. You asked for Circle 5920," she is discharged. But if she's meek and pleasant, she keeps her job.

Cops' College

New York will soon dedicate the only college of its kind in the world—a police college. Not only the sciences, but also the arts, will be taught to criminal catchers. Fifty men, from universities as well as the police ranks, will form the faculty. The theory method, long the pet of writers of detective fiction, will not be taught. Instead, detectives will be instructed in correlating known facts. One wag insists that the students will be taught coptic. New York, by the way, was the first city in the country to organize a real police force, having organized a day force in 1825.

Kitchen Aid

The traffic control lights, up to now utterly useless except as a source of annoyance to pedestrians and motorists alike, have at last been put to practical employment. A certain young housewife who, although she lives on Park avenue, gets her husband's breakfast in the morning, has discovered that the lights are perfect for timing the eggs. Two green and three red flashes add up to just the right time to make hubby's eggs medium soft boiled.

* * *

Unkind

One of the kindest of all theatrical criticisms that have come to my knowledge is an opinion of a certain actress' ability that was written by a man who is now, fortunately or unfortunately out of the profession. The actress was playing in a drama which involved the theft of a pearl necklace. "They spent three acts looking for the pearls," he wrote, "and from the way Miss Blank acted, I suspected all along that they were hidden in her mouth."

* * *

Busybody

Late one evening a woman and her escort were taking a stroll along Fifth avenue, and they came upon a private policeman assigned to guard the various exclusive stores on the block. (In many sections of the city, merchants feel safer if they hire their own police force.) The private watchman stepped up to an ornate entrance, grasped the door and shook it vigorously, to determine that the lock hadn't been tampered with. His actions were puzzling to the woman stroller.

"Hey," she heyed in a well modulated voice, "You can't get in there. It's after hours and it's locked."

* * *

Squelched

Out of desperation a certain young woman has evolved what appears to be the perfect way to cope with a song writer who lives in the apartment above. This gentleman is not usually noisy, but he's annoying even when he's quiet. He will strike a chord, think for ten minutes, and then strike another chord almost, but not quite, like the first one. Occasionally he will play a whole piece—a classic, usually. He is looking for a passage which can be turned into a good popular tune.

The other afternoon he played a Grieg sonata. It was very badly done, and the exasperated young woman below dashed to her piano to play the same piece—just to show how it should be done.

Then, to rub it in, she selected certain melodious passages and jazzed them, also to show the song writer how it should be done. He didn't strike another chord all afternoon.

Missourians Shoot Big Eagle and Albino Quail

West Plains, Mo.—An albino quail and a black eagle with a wing spread of more than seven feet are on exhibition here as unusual kills of the current hunting season.

Until the eagle was bagged by N. E. Morrison of St. James, Mo., farmers in this vicinity had been losing pigs and other small farm animals. The quail was shot by Edward Hill near Dora, Mo., and is the most perfect specimen ever seen there, according to veteran hunters.

Old Miner Explains Butte Tunnel Mystery

Butte, Mont.—A tunnel leading under one of Butte's main streets, discovery of which caused much speculation concerning its use in the early history of the community, has been explained by an old time miner as having been built to drain a flooded mine shaft. The mine was known as the Destroying Angel claim.

ALBANIA ABOUNDS IN ROMAN RELICS

Rich Finds Dug Up in Fields by Scientists.

Rome.—When King Zogu of Albania presented to Premier Mussolini some time ago the superb marble head of the "Goddess of Buthrotum," discovered in his kingdom, he was doing more than an act of courtesy. His act emphasized the growing importance of Albania as a rich treasure trove for archeologists.

The small Balkan country of Albania has recently taken its place in the classical tradition of European countries because of the rich finds of Hellenic and Roman architecture and sculpture which have been discovered there.

Italians have found the traces of their forefathers in this small pastoral land. The Italian archeological mission, led by Dr. Luigi Ugolini, has unearthed antique treasures of great importance in that part of Albania which in Roman times was known as Illyria, or rather formed part of it.

Find Relics Under Earth.

Hidden under many feet of rough uncultivated land, as archeologists suspected for centuries, there have been excavated ancient theaters, temples, Roman baths, an early Christian baptistery of the Byzantine period and a valuable collection of Greek and Roman statuary and funeral monuments.

For more than 600 years Italian archeologists have been convinced that countless treasures of Greco-Roman civilization were hidden in the soil of Albania. The first archeological expedition from Italy left Rome in 1418. A second expedition followed in 1435. Neither had much success, partly owing to the troubled state of the country which made exploration difficult and partly owing to lack of adequate financial and technical means.

It remained for Doctor Ugolini, after another partly successful archeological expedition in the early Nineteenth century, to bring to light the ancient treasures of old Illyria.

According to Ugolini, there is still so much excavation to be done along the Dalmatian coast and especially in the zone of Buthrotum that millions of lire would be required to undertake the task thoroughly.

Discoveries Are Important.

The list of Doctor Ugolini's discoveries on the site of Buthrotum and in the vicinity is long and important. The outstanding finds were the Byzantine bapistery, the statues of Augustus and other emperors, the temple of Esculepius and the remains of the Roman baths.

Buthrotum, the chief site of Ugolini's discoveries, is connected in legend and poem with the Virgilian epic. Virgil relates that Eneas, after the fall of Troy, embarked for Thrace and Crete, whence he proceeded for Buthrotum, where King Helenus offered him a great reception and a warm welcome.

Artist Doesn't Require Poverty, Prince Claims

Stockholm.—An artist does not need poverty or a Bohemian existence to develop his talent, says Prince Eugene of Sweden, brother of King Gustaf and himself one of Sweden's foremost landscape painters.

Writing in a Gothenburg paper, the royal artist recalls that there have been many great painters who have not suffered from material wants, while others who had to fight against hardships and indifferences would have been still greater had they been freed from economic difficulties.

The prince says that he himself has had other obstacles to overcome, the greatest of all his royal birth and public opinion as to what a prince should or should not do.

"From my point of view," he says, "the work is its own reward. When I have finished a canvas and see it hanging on the wall, it interests me less than when I am working on it. Above all I want to be treated as a real painter.

"I have studied and worked hard. My artistic ability may be only mediocre, but I am a professional craftsman, not an amateur."

Infant Doubles His Height in Two Days

Boston.—The infant son of Mr. and Mrs. John Tkaczuk doubled his height in two days, according to Dr. Mark Rittner, in charge of the case. At birth the child weighed two pounds one ounce and was only seven inches tall. Two days later he was fourteen inches tall and weighed six ounces more than at birth.

WIFE AIDS ESKIMO TO HANG HIMSELF

Tribe Considers Act Man's Own Business.

Edmonton, Alta.—Despondent and fearful because he imagined he had been deserted by fellow members of his tribe, a fifty-year-old paralyzed Eskimo, living in a snow house near Ellice river, northwest territories, committed suicide with the assistance of his wife and in the presence of other members of his household, according to details of a weird case which was recently investigated by Royal Canadian mounted police officers.

The man, one Mukhagaluk, became paralyzed in the spine and hips and was unable to support himself. When his son-in-law, Konalyak, left camp the aged paralytic became convinced he was being abandoned and announced his intention of killing himself.

For three days in succession he demanded a loaded rifle, and when this was denied him he attempted to choke himself with his fingers. Finally, on the fourth day, he prevailed upon his wife, Kalaryuk, to tie a double strand of heavy cotton twine to a pole stretched across the roof of the snow house.

Mukhagaluk then crawled along a snow bench to the suspended twine in the center of which he fashioned a noose, slipped it around his neck and hanged himself.

Meanwhile his wife and other members of his family remonstrated with him verbally but made no physical attempt to restrain the head of the household from his contemplated act.

The northern tribes believe that no one should interfere with a man's actions so long as they affect nobody but himself.

The police decided that no arrests should be made after they had made a full investigation of the case.

Home Never Like This, So He Remains in Jail

Minneapolis.—A little soft music, professor—a song of sweetness and light and contentment.

Enter, a man completely satisfied with the city workhouse—in spite of an opportunity for freedom.

Arrested on a minor charge our hero was sentenced to serve 90 days in the corrective institution where the decorative railing for the Third avenue bridge was made and sundry products of manual labor take shape in the hands of prisoners. He was not given the opportunity of paying a fine.

Friends sought to have his term made as pleasant as possible and asked that he be assigned to the courthouse kitchen.

Still not satisfied, his friends sought to have the sentence changed from imprisonment to a fine. The judge that sentenced him finally relented, suspended the sentence and imposed a fine.

Delighted, the friends went to the workhouse to break the good news.

The object of their brotherly efforts looked away disinterestedly.

"No, thanks," he said. "I'm going to stay here. I've got a good job."

"Hex" Doctor's Lotion Is Blamed for Death

Reading, Pa.—Possibility that a "hex" doctor's prescriptions of an inflammable skin lotion caused the death of Mrs. Harry MacDonald, thirty-four years old, found dying from burns in her home recently, led Dr. H. Ammarell, coroner, to begin an investigation.

At first Doctor Ammarell believed death was accidental, but when he discovered that nothing else was burned, he investigated.

Anthony Braum, the woman's father, stated that Mrs. MacDonald had been visiting "hex" doctors for several weeks and he believed that one of them had given her a fluid to place on her skin, which he believed may have been inflammable.

Nebraskan Has Bible Dating Back to 1737

Wauneta, Neb.—Mrs. George Theobald of Wauneta is the possessor of a Bible translated by a Martin Luther and compiled in 1737. The tome has been in the possession of Mrs. Theobald's family for 194 years. It is made of parchment and is bound with wood and leather. It is in an excellent state of preservation. Brass bands protect the covers which bear the marks of heavy rings that once hooked the Bible to the pulpit of some old church.

Discover White Russians Drawing Soviet Pensions

Moscow.—Investigations of the pensions bureaus in various cities have revealed that some men who fought against the Soviet government have for years been drawing stipends as patriotic war veterans. Because of the chaotic conditions during the civil war period it is frequently difficult to establish on which side people fought. Some "whites" have thus managed to find a place in the red pension lists.

Leipzig University Is Holding Overflow Meets

Leipzig.—In popular lecture courses at the University of Leipzig, which more people want to attend than can be accommodated in the ordinary lecture room, provisions have been made for overflow meetings in nearby rooms to which the lecturer's voice is conveyed by means of loud speakers.

That COLD

Colds come suddenly. You can often end them just as quickly! Take Bayer Aspirin the moment you've caught one. A single sneeze should be the signal, or the first sign of congestion or headache, or soreness. Exposure to cold and wet isn't half so serious when you've learned to protect yourself with Bayer Aspirin. For the speedy relief of colds, headaches, neuralgic or neuritic pain, and even the acute suffering caused by rheumatism, there is nothing so sure and so safe as genuine Aspirin tablets stamped Bayer. They make a marvelous gargle, too. See proven directions in every package.

Are you prepared to render first aid and quick comfort the moment your youngster has an upset of any sort? Could you do the right thing—immediately—though the emergency came without warning—perhaps tonight? Castoria is a mother's standby at such times. There is nothing like it in emergencies, and nothing better for everyday use. For a sudden attack of colic, or the gentle relief of constipation; to allay a feverish condition, or to soothe a fretful baby that can't sleep. This pure vegetable preparation is always ready to ease an ailing youngster. It is just as harmless as the recipe on the wrapper reads. If you see Chas. H. Fletcher's signature, it is genuine Castoria. It is harmless to the smallest infant; doctors will tell you so.

You can tell from the recipe on the wrapper how mild it is, and how good for little systems. But continue with Castoria until a child is grown.

Way to Happiness Simple says California Physician

After 28 Years' Practice Describes Natural Treatment which Keeps People Well

"AFTER over 28 years of the study and practice of medicine, during which time I have treated and supervised the treatment of almost every variety of human illness," writes Dr. Martin J. Dobson of Los Angeles, "I believe I have discovered the greatest blessing that has been bestowed upon the human family. Statistics show that of all classes of persons, physicians and nurses live to a riper old age than any other class of people. I believe this is no doubt due to the fact that they know more about the importance of daily elimination.

Dr. Dobson's Discovery

"The remedy I am speaking of is colorless, tasteless, harmless to the most delicate alimentary tract, from infancy to old age. It is non-habit-forming, and it is essential to the smooth running efficiency of the human body, which needs lubrication just like any other machine.

"This remedy is Nujol.

"Most human ailments can be traced to the alimentary tract for either the main or the contributing cause, and most of these disorders can be prevented or cured through proper cleansing and regulating by the administration of Nujol as per instructions on the bottle and wrapper, or as ordered by the physician or nurse."

Nujol Laboratories considers it a privilege to publish Dr. Dobson's endorsement of Nujol.

Physicians and nurses themselves use and advise you to use Nujol regularly to clean the poisons out of your body (we all have them), because these poisons are what make us feel headachy, depressed, low in our minds.

It is always safe to use Nujol, because it is not a medicine; it contains absolutely no drugs; it cannot hurt even the littlest baby; it forms no habit; it is non-fattening. Nujol is harmless internal lubrication.

What This Should Mean to You

In the last few weeks we have had over 5,000 letters from people all over the world, telling us how Nujol has helped them to happiness and success by keeping their bodies internally clean. You can buy Nujol in sealed packages at any drug store. It costs but a few cents, and it will make you feel like a million dollars.

Start Nujol tonight. Use it regularly for two weeks, and learn the joy and the happiness that comes from buoyant, zestful health!

ENUMERATION DISTRICTS IN MARSHALL COUNTY

The Census Bureau will have 23 enumerators at work in Marshall County on April 2, taking the population and farm census of 1930, the county having been divided up in the following enumeration districts:

A—Agdar and Excel
B—Alma and McCrea
C—Alvarado and Vega
D—Argyle, Bloomer and Middle River township
E—Augsburg and Wanger
F—Bigwoods and Fork
G—Boxville, Warren, Warrenton
H—Cedar, Como, Thief Lake, and Whiteford
I—Comstock, Viking, and Viking village
J—Donnelly, Eagle Point, and Parker
K—East Park, Lincoln, and Strandquist
L—East Valley, Eckvoll, Grand Plain and Mud Lake
M—Esplee, Grygla, Moylan and Valley
N—Foldahl and Marsh Grove
O—Holt, township and village
P—Huntley, Middle River village, and Spruce Valley
Q—Linsell, Moose River, Rollis and Veldt
R—Nelson Park and Wright
S—Newfolden village & township
T—New Maine and West Valley
U—Oak Park and Oslo
V—Sinnott, Stephen, & Tamarac

NewSolum has a separate enumerator.

The enumerators are paid 4c per capita in cities, 5c in villages 8c in the country except in sparsely settled districts where they get 10c per capita. Marshall county townships under this classification are: Agdar, Cedar, Como, Donnelly, East Park, East Valley, Eckvoll, Esplee, Foldahl, Grand Plain, Huntley, Linsell, Moose River, Moylan, Mud Lake, New Maine, Parker, Thief Lake, Veldt, and Whiteford. Farm Schedules, 70c each.

All the enumerators and other employees of the Census Bureau are sworn to secrecy under severe penalties, and assessors and others connected with the levying and collection of taxes are barred from employment in connection with the Census. Individual statements will not be given out, but will be used as units in making up the National Inventory of the people and property.

Besides the questions asked 10 years ago, you will be asked whether you own a radio and whether you are out of employment. The farm schedule is quite complete and when the enumerator comes, you will have to figure on taking an hour off to give him the information he asks for.

LESSON 92

PRODUCTION: The boys and the hired men will all be better workmen if they know how much butterfat the cows produce each month and how much they make in dollars. Keep records and make them a matter of news.

MANUFACTURING: Good butter begins with good cream, but unless all the equipment in the creamery is in the most sanitary condition, the cream may be lowered in quality. In the creamery, cream comes in contact with the vats, cream pump and pipes that carry the cream to the churn, and with the churn. It is surprising how quickly high quality cream can be affected unless all this equipment is thoroly clean and sterilized with boiling water or steam.

MARKETING: LandO'Lakes Creameries works to make the market price of butter a profitable one for the farmers through four different channels. First, thru high quality butter—people eat more butter when it is good. Second, thru the sale of good butter on as many markets as possible—LandO'Lakes butter is distributed from 80 of the leading cities of the United States instead of 3 cities as formerly. Third, thru advertising good butter. Fourth, thru legislation—tariff on butter, and is working for a tariff on vegetable oils from Philippine Is. from which oleomargarine is made.

School Notes

High School

Ruth Olson and Julius Faiman have been absent the past week.

Joe Nelson was not here Monday, so our floors were unswept, while the assembly was not kept so comfortable.

The report cards came out on Wednesday.

The debate which the Juniors gave Friday was in favor of the negatives.

Mr. Vieths—What is an acid?
Jerry—It changes vegetable blues.
Ethel—What are "vegetable blues"?
Mr. Vieths—I don't know — never had them.

The High School pupils voted on the National Anthem. The votes were as follows: America, The Beautiful, nineteen votes; Star Spangled Banner, nine votes.

The following pupils are on the Honor Roll for the last six weeks:

Freshmen
Eleanor Larson, 91
Chester Larson, 90
Julius Faiman, 90

Sophomores
Richard Michaelson, 90
Ferne Peterson, 89

Juniors
Walter Steinhauer, 92
Verna Johnson, 90
Johnnie Doran, 89

Seventh and Eighth Grades

The seventh and eighth grades have voted on the National Anthem. The results were: America the Beautiful, sixteen votes; The Star Spangled Banner, one vote; and for no legal anthems, six votes.

The highest marks for this six weeks are as follows:

Seventh Grade
Ethel Nohre, 91
Eunice Johnson, 89

Eighth Grade
Margaret Davis, 91
Minerva Hanson, 89
Stilof Anderson, 89

Fifth and Sixth Grades

Our honor students this six weeks period are:

Gertrude Nygaard, 91
Clayton Gunheim, 90
Gladys Michaelson, 90
Gertrude Nohre, 89

The boys are making bird-houses during their Industrial Arts period.

The Willys-Knight driven by the fifth grade won the spelling race by a hundred mile lead.

Pupils having perfect attendance this six weeks are Harriet Hanson, Eleanor Peterson, Gladys Michaelson, Olga Nelson, Orlene Hagglund, Gertrude Nohre, Thelma Kolden, Clayton Gunheim, Lillian Michaelson, Ruth Bottem, Helena Johnson.

Third and Fourth Grades

The pupils of the third grade are studying about Holland. Plans have been made to construct a scene of Holland on the sand-table. They are looking forward to this.

An arithmetic race is being held between the third and fourth grades. The third grade is represented by a Willys-Knight and the fourth by a Star.

Every day the average mark of each grade it taken and the grade having the highest average travels one hundred miles that day.

In the "Weekly Reading Record" the third grade is represented by the Reds and the fourth by the Blues.

The purpose of this is to see which grade has the highest average at the end of each week.

The pupils on the Honor Roll for this six weeks are:

Third Grade

Lucille Horien	average 90
Lorna Peterson	average 90

Fourte Grade

Evelyn Larson	average 90
Opal Sanoden	average 91
Beatrice Larson	average 91

First and Second Grades

The first grade pupils are studying about the Dutch people in their language class, and are going to decorate their sand-table with a Dutch scene. The second-graders are going to start studying about the Dutch people some time this month.

Both the first and second graders are making kites and windmills tobe used in decorating their room.

Most of the winter decorations have been taken down and spring scenes are replaced. A new calendar has also been added.

The second grades have an arithmetic chart in which they place their daily marks.

SOME FACTS ABOUT OLEOMARGARINE

Following in a form letter which had a wide circulation recently and which will be of interest to our creamery patrons:

"Butter has no substitute.

"Now what is Oleomargarine?

"Is it really the poor man's butter or the rich man's graft?

"How is it made? Does any man want to feed his children on it? Let us see.

"Oleomargarines are made from skimmed milk, cocoanut oil or tallow, and salt. The main ingredient is skimmed milk, which has no fat or life-sustaining substances.

"Now let us look at the ingredients. Many margarines are advertised as the 'White Meat of the Cocoanut.' Cocoanut oil such as is used in American oleo is made from Copra. Copra is dried cocoanut meat, but let us see the condition of this stuff before it is refined.

"Copra comes from the Philippine Islands. The cocoanuts fall from the trees, are broken open, and the meat dried in heaps under the tropical suns. This is called Copra.

"When dry, Copra looks and smells something like stable manure, or worse. When the stuff is ready for shipment, swarms of half-naked Malays load on ships, tramping it in the holds of vessels with bare feet. An army of naked Malays sweating under tropical heat, tramping copra that is going to be made into the poor man's butter. Think of it!

"When Copra arrives at American oil mills, it is run out of the ship with conveyors. Generally it is piled up in the open air where it attracts millions of flies and looks exactly like piles of stable manure and smells a darn sight worse.

"This compost is then ground and pressed between steam heated rollers. The raw oil is the most rancid and evil-smelling thing in the world. Until recently it was used exclusively for soap grease.

"Scientists discovered ways of refining it. The process is simple.

"First, the oil is heated to a very high degree. It is then placed in vats and large quantities of sodium injected. The rancidity attacks the sodium solution and is eaten away. The oil is then treated with ether, which process solidifies the oil.

"And this is the stuff they advertise as the 'White Meat of the Cocoanut.'

"Here is a recipe for making 1,000 pounds of Oleo:

700 lbs. of cocoanut oil @6½c	$45.50
30 gallons of skimmed milk	1.50
51 pounds of salt	1.00
	$48.00

"Did you ever stop to think that it requires five pounds of Oleo to furnish the nourishment for the human system that one pound of butter will furnish?"

Notice of Town Election

The Annual Town Election for the Town of Holt will be held in the Ringbo schoolhouse, Dist. 58, near Pete Sorter's place, on Tuesday, March 11. Turn out and vote for your candidates.

Delinquent Tax List

This week we are publishing the delinquent tax list for 1928 and also the official proceedings of the county board for their February meeting.

Old Expression

"Once in a blue moon" was first used by Roy and Barlow in "Rede Me and be not Rothe" in England in 1528. It was formerly used to designate something that will never happen. E. C. Brewer in his book, "Phrase and Fable," says: "On December 10, 1883, we had a blue moon. The winter was unusually mild." The expression is now used to mean very seldom.

NINE ROAD RULES ALL SHOULD OBEY

With spring driving ready to start, it is time to give a little more thot to safety. One trouble is that there are so many rules in the traffic law that it is impossible for most people to remember them. A pamphlet published by the safety committee of the Minnesota Department of the American Legion gives nine important rules which any driver should be able to remember and observe. Here they are:

1. Never try to pass another vehicle going in the same direction, when at a street intersection, on a curve, or when going up or down a hill.

2. Give the right of way to the car on your right at street intersections. Do not presume too much when you have the right of way. Remember the other fellow may not know that you have it.

3. When on a through street or highway, give other drivers and pedestrians a chance to cross or enter.

4. Always signal before turning to the left.

5. Obey promptly and to the letter, all traffic signs.

6. When you intend to turn to the left, give your signal at least 50 feet before you reach your turning point; then move over to the center line of the street.

7. When turning, either right or left, watch for pedestrians as well, as vehicles.

8. Always stop when you drive out of an alley, garage, or private driveway. Make sure that the way is clear, and sound your horn.

9. When driving away from the curb always signal. A moving line of traffic has the right of way.

The pamphlet sums up the "unwritten law of the highway" in these words: "Play fair with the other fellow. You'll both feel better for it. Qualities of true gentlemen are reflected in highway courtesy."

A Sour Stomach

In the same time it takes a dose of soda to bring a little temporary relief of gas and sour stomach, Phillips Milk of Magnesia has acidity completely checked, and the digestive organs all tranquilized. Once you have tried this form of relief you will cease to worry about your diet and experience a new freedom in eating.

This pleasant preparation is just as good for children, too. Use it whenever coated tongue or fetid breath signals need of a sweetener. Physicians will tell you that every spoonful of Phillips Milk of Magnesia neutralizes many times its volume in acid. Get the genuine, the name Phillips is important. Imitations do not act the same!

Vatican Wins Odd Suit for Payment of Legacy

A delicate point of law, growing out of the fluctuations in European money values following the war, has been settled by a Hungarian court in favor of the Vatican. The case grew out of the will left by a Budapest citizen, Michele Bakony, who died in 1907 leaving 1,000 crowns to the Holy See, the amount to be paid after the death of his spouse, who, it so happened, remained alive until 1927. At that time the equivalent of 1,000 crowns in Italian money was 5 cents, and the Vatican consequently refused to accept the legacy, taking the matter to court and demanding the equivalent of the sum which Bakony actually had intended to grant the Holy See. Now, after two years of discussion, the Hungarian court has decided to give the Vatican 70 per cent of what it has demanded, or approximately $140. This being considerably more than a nickel, the Vatican has expressed itself as completely satisfied with the decision.

Airplane Scared Them

An American-made plane recently flew over Senchow, an ancient city in West Hunan, China, on way to the fighting front. The populace in the district had never seen or heard of an airplane, and so when the machine sped above the clouds with its roaring noise, a great consternation was caused. "This must be the nine-headed bird," the farmers and the local gentry shouted, and they took no chance. Immediately the whole town turned out and with gongs and cymbals started to frighten away the mysterious monster.

Girlhood

The trying time in a young girl's life is reached when Nature leads her uncertain steps across the line which divides girlhood and womanhood. Neglect at this critical period is largely responsible for much of the misery of women. Often there is need of some safe, strengthening tonic to overcome the languor, nervousness and distress girls commonly experience at this time. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription soothes the nerves, encourages the appetite and helps the entire womanly organism. It is purely herbal—contains no narcotic, nor any harmful ingredient. Druggists. SANDY COULD SEE A SILVER LINING

(© by D. J. Walsh.)

FROM the little shanty in the middle of his melon patch, Sandy Clay watched the black clouds rolling down from the northwest.

"Nobody'd stop to steal melons in the face of a storm like that," he mused. Then he started for the cornfield, a short cut for home.

Five minutes later he emerged, limping onto the porch and dropping into an old rocking chair, to recover his breath. Mrs. Clay and the two children were peering anxiously from the outside cellarway.

"Come out!" he commanded in a cheery voice. "It's no cyclone. Too late in the season. Anyhow, you never see twisters from clouds that reach clear across the sky like that."

"No," retorted Mrs. Clay, somewhat reassured but still apprehensive, "and you never heard of a stray shot from a hunter's rifle hitting you in the foot and laying you up for several weeks—till it did."

"There, now," said Sandy, "it might have been worse. Get into the house and we'll shut the door—it's safer. Here comes the overture."

The overture included howling winds driving sheets of rain in all directions while vivid lightning cut the blackness. Then came an ominous lull. A sharp click and a blue flash, instantly followed by an earth-jarring crash, started the children crying.

"There, now," said Sandy. "Nobody's hurt—and it might have been worse."

"Listen!" cried Mrs. Clay. "Worse is coming—hail!"

In five minutes all was over. Even the ground was still white with frozen pellets, the sun was breaking through the clouds and a beautiful rainbow formed the proscenium arch set with financial tragedy for Sandy Clay.

A neighbor, driving by, paused at the gate. "Well, Sandy," he shouted, "your melon vines are pounded out of sight and your corn here is shredded, but the hail never touched your long forty in the lower bottom. The storm was just playing out when it reached there."

"Good!" exclaimed Sandy. "That lower forty is good for seventy bushels of corn to the acre, so it might have been worse. Guess I'll hitch up and drive round a bit—it's too muddy for the old car."

A few minutes later Sandy had returned from the stable and stood facing his family with an odd expression. "Well?" queried Mrs. Clay.

"It might have been worse," replied Sandy. "That crack of lightning might have burned the barn, but—we haven't any team now. I—I guess I'll walk over and take a look at the bottom forty while—while you're getting supper."

In three-quarters of an hour he returned. The family ate their supper in silence till near the close, when Mrs. Clay spoke: "I thought I heard a roaring sound. Is it another storm?"

"No," said Sandy, pushing back from the table, "but the river is booming. Maybe also the noise of the work trains coming with trainloads of stone and steel rails, to hold down the bridge and the long trestle. They've got wire reports from up river, and they think the big fill across the bottom is sure to go."

Mrs. Clay eyed her husband sharply and then, at sight of his wry grin, burst into a hysterical laugh and exclaimed: "Go on! Tell me the south forty is a total loss, and don't forget to explain that it might have been worse!"

"It might," replied Sandy, gathering the children in his arms. "We've got Bud and Sis yet, with all their lives, except five or six years, before 'em and—and the mortgage on the farm isn't due till next month."

"And maybe by that time your foot will be well enough to walk when we start tramping," said Mrs. Clay, still laughing back the tears, "and maybe by then you'll have learned the folly of throwing up a good position for that of the glad, free and independent life of the jolly husbandman."

"When one's clear down," replied Sandy, "there's only one direction remaining—straight up. Now we'll have no horse feed to buy, no melon guards to hire, no corncribs to build and—and so forth."

The river continued to rise until all former high water records were broken. The railroad fill and the trestle across the valley were swept away. The bridge, undermined, fell into the main channel, and the temporary accumulation of drift threw the force of the raging current lengthwise across the long forty, sweeping away the black loam as well as the corn, and leaving channels and pits twenty feet deep in the variegated subsoil.

One evening, a week afterward, Sandy returned from what he had facetiously termed the daily exploration of the basement of his bottom forty. "Do you know," he said to Mrs. Clay, "that by some strange quirk of the glacial drift, I happen to have the only gravel pit of any magnitude in this part of the state? There's enough to gravel all the highways in four counties—and hail can't riddle the crop. Get me a pillow and blanket, for I'm going to camp out there tonight—"

"Sandy Clay, you needn't tell me that gravel is so precious that you'll have to guard it like a melon patch!" Mrs. Clay's voice showed signs of strained patience, as she continued: "Has the hot sun on that wet ground filled you full of malaria and affected your head?"

"Not so much that I don't know I've found one of the largest and best preserved skeletons of the ancient mastodon ever brought to light. I had Professor Dean of the university on the phone today. He agrees with me, that such a fine specimen should bring a high figure. He's coming tomorrow. Meantime, I'm taking no chances of some other person having seen the find before I saw it.

"And the railroad company wants to buy the land. They'll give me a year to remove the gravel, then with a little dredging they'll change the course of the river to run through the long forty, cutting out the troublesome bend. They will relocate their track across the valley, bringing a bridge across the new channel before diverting the waters, so you see it might have been—"

Mrs. Clay interrupted: "How much is that washed-out forty, that I advised you not to buy, going to bring—bones, gravel and all?"

"It should net $20,000 or more," replied Sandy. "And by the way, Professor Dean said I could have my old position back within the year, at a substantial increase in salary, as there is to be a number of changes in the faculty, and—"

"Are to be Prof. Sandford Clay. If you are going back to the university, you'll have to commence polishing your language."

Professor Clay was giving his erstwhile lame foot the benefit of a few setting-up exercises as he replied:

"That advice might have been worse."

How Squirrel Helps to Promote Forest Growth

All trees, you know, grow from seeds which other trees of the same kind bear. These may be real seeds, or they may be fruit with the seeds inside, or nuts, which are a form of seed themselves.

Now, squirrels eat nuts, acorns, berries and other forms of seeds, and they store them away for winter use by burying them in the ground. In the autumn when the nuts are ripe, the squirrel frequently climbs to the end of the limb of a tree, where he cuts off the nuts with his teeth and lets them drop to the ground. After cutting off a lot of them, he descends to the ground, finds a nut, carries it in his mouth until he finds a place that suits his fancy and there digs a hole three or four inches deep and large enough to hold his treasure. Then he drops the nut in the hole, pushes it down firmly with his nose and covers it with dirt.

Having buried one nut he goes and gets another and repeats the process. He will continue doing this for several hours at a time if he is not disturbed, and he will do it every day as long as the weather is fine and the nuts are plentiful. Eventually he has buried a lot of nuts, and then he forgets where he has put them!

During very cold weather the squirrel sleeps, but when a sunny winter day comes along he wakes up and is hungry. So he climbs out of his snug nest and goes down to the ground to find some nuts to eat, hunting until he finds some of those he buried several months before. But he buries many more nuts than he can use during the winter and many of these are left right where he puts them, where they start to grow, continuing as long as they are not destroyed by animals or in some other way. These little trees form the young growth of the forest.

Thus each year these animals help to renew the growth of trees, which replace those destroyed by accident or by enemies. It is because of them that the forest seems to remain just about the same all the time, unless it is cut down by men or razed by fire, and if there were no squirrels the forests would be much different from what they are.—Washington Star.

Won Fame in Many Lines

William De Morgan, artist and novelist, was born in London on November 16, 1839. Educated at University college and the Academy schools, he became a memmer of the circle which gathered around Rossetti, William Morris and Burne-Jones, and experimented in various forms of decorative art. He set up a kiln, discovered some of the secrets of the old potters, and formed a firm to develop the manufacture of tiles and pottery on a commercial scale. Many fine examples of his work are in the ceramic galleries of the Victoria and Albert museum, London. In 1905, when he was over sixty-five, he retired from business and began his successful career as a novelist. "Joseph Vance," fragments of which had been rescued from destruction by his wife, appeared in 1906. He died in London of trench fever on January 15, 1917.

John's Mother Praises Doctor

There isn't a mother living who won't agree that no half-sick child should be the subject for an experiment with medicines of uncertain merit. When your child is bilious, headachy, half-sick, feverish, restless, with coated tongue, bad breath, no appetite or energy, you know that nine times out of ten it's a sign his little stomach and bowels need purging. And when you know that for over fifty years leading physicians have endorsed one preparation for this condition, there doesn't seem to be any reason for "trying" things.

Rich, fruity California Fig Syrup clears the little stomach and bowels gently, harmlessly and in a hurry. It regulates the bowels, gives tone and strength to them and to the stomach; and helps to give your child new strength, energy and vitality. Thousands of Western mothers praise it. Mrs. Joseph W. Hill, 4306 Bedford Ave., Omaha, Nebraska, says: "I'll never forget the doctor who got me to give my baby boy, John, California Fig Syrup. Nothing else seemed to help his weak bowels. That was when he was just a baby. He suffered a good deal before I gave him Fig Syrup, but it stopped his trouble quick. I have used it with him for colds and little upset spells ever since. I consider him a Fig Syrup boy."

Insist on the genuine article. See that the carton bears the word "California." Over four million bottles used a year.

ONE PRESCRIPTION MADE FAMILY DOCTOR FAMOUS

Seldom has any single act been of greater benefit to mankind than that of Dr. Caldwell in 1885, when he wrote the prescription which has carried his fame to the four corners of the earth.

Over and over, Dr. Caldwell wrote the prescription as he found men, women and children suffering from those common symptoms of constipation, such as coated tongue, bad breath, headaches, gas, nausea, biliousness, no energy, lack of appetite, and similar things.

Demand for this prescription grew so fast, because of the pleasant, quick way it relieved such symptoms of constipation, that by 1888 Dr. Caldwell was forced to have it put up ready for use. Today, Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, as it is called, is always ready at any drugstore.

Heart of Poison Victim Is Missing

Paris.—Jean Galmot, picturesque deputy of French Guinea who before his murder promised his electorate in an impassioned speech that "my heart will never leave you," promised more than he realized.

When the body of Galmot was brought to France for legal examination following his death from poisoning, the doctors were surprised to find the heart was not in the corpse.

Galmot was one of France's unusual characters. Before his election to the chamber of deputies, he was a gold prospector, a trapper, head of a Guinea rum and rosewood trust, and a journalist. On his death bed he insisted he had been poisoned by political enemies.

BRIGANDS TAKE BIG DEATH TOLL

Attack British Vessel and Slay Scores.

Shanghai. — Out of the murky reaches of the Oriental seas comes the latest story of the deadly operations of modern pirates—olive-skinned men who prey upon shipping on the rivers of China. More than four score men, women and children, most of them Chinese, are dead as the result of a raid on the British steamer Haiching, under command of Capt. C. H. Farrar.

The ship was a mass of flames, with the survivors of its crew and passengers huddled on the main deck, when the British destroyer Sterling reached the scene in response to an S O S sent by the radio operator before he was killed.

As usual, the pirates boarded the steamer at the beginning of its journey and posed as passengers until time for the attack. A dozen persons, including several officers of the ship, fell in the first attack.

The surviving officers kept up a constant fire on the pirates until the destroyer arrived, and in the meantime scores of natives drowned when they attempted to launch the lifeboats and escape in the darkness. The pirates, seeing the approach of the war craft, set fire to the ship and leaped into the water. Many of them were captured, however, and executed the next day.

Boy Tests Way to Die and He Goes Too Far

New York.—Death's deep mysteries so fascinated the introspective faculties of John Broberg, 15, Curtis high school athlete, that he fastened on the idea of experimenting with the sensations of dying.

But experiment became actuality and the lad strangled himself to death with strips of a bath towel in his home on Staten Island.

This was the only motive that suggested itself to police. His mother was loath to believe her boy had committed suicide and insisted he was without difficulty in his studies, had no romance and had been in happy mood 45 minutes before she cut down his body and screamed for help.

Neighbors summoned Dr. William Thomas, who said the lad was dead.

Assistant Medical Examiner George Mord recorded the case as suicide. But the mother insisted he could not have killed himself.

In the absence of any other theory, the police decided it was likely the boy had tried to experiment with the sensations of dying, intending to free himself from the noose as he felt death creeping on.

Dressmakers Say Long Skirts Here to Stay

London.—Leading French and English dressmakers and designers care little for the cry raised against long skirts. They say that they are in to stay, and that even sports clothes for the coming spring will be affected.

Evening dresses designed on Regent street and Bond street in London and the Rue de La Paix now trail the ground at the back and sides for several yards, though the majority of them are shorter in front and reveal the leg nearly to the knee.

Sweethearts of 1880 Married in Year 1930

Noblesville, Ind.—A courtship interrupted here 50 years ago has culminated at last in marriage. Charles W. Sapp, then twenty-five, sparked Jessie Stringman, twenty. But they drifted apart, Sapp going West and marrying. Miss Stringman married Jaspar Leeman. Sapp's wife died and he returned here recently. Leeman died sometime ago. Now each having attained three score and ten they have been married and have bought a farm near here.

She was thrown from the sled and the automobile ran over her body.

A feature of Wotanin Waste is a full page cover picture of each issue sketched on stencil by Thomas Bulls Eyes, a pupil of the school.

Goose Dinner in Prospect

George Yelich, of Detroit, chuckled as he glanced out of his window and saw a man carrying a big live goose. He was amused by the stranger's struggles to keep the goose from getting free. Mrs. Yelich now has a goose that is being held for its owner.

Nature's Wise Provision

It is claimed that a cod weighing 21 pounds will produce 2,700,000 eggs in one spawning period; these are so small that it takes 337,000 to fill a quart pail. As for the reason why most fish produce eggs rather than living young, it may be suggested that this is a wise provision of nature in view of the great loss involved. For each egg destined to become a mature fish there must be thousands sacrificed to be food for other marine life.

For Fellowes the voyage now was irksome almost beyond bearing. He was impatient to come up with the Badger, and the inevitable daily contact with Cara embarrassed and harassed him. And Ben Inglepin, too, was continually in evidence, a set look on his plump face as he stared into the gray mists that hid the west. Only the duenna remained invisible, keeping to the after-cabin in all weathers, her presence indicated by occasional gargantuan rumbles when the seasickness visited her. Yet Fellowes sensed that in some mysterious fashion of her own the fat woman maintained a surveillance upon all that occurred aboard the privateer.

One and all, the men of the Centurian were admirers of Cara. Sorry for her, perhaps, pitying her plight, old Noggle and Spencer very paternal; Breed and Noggle's sons and nephew and O'Shaughnessy, the surgeon, ardent in varying degrees; Nimrod Sopher pompously devoted.

Red-headed Aloysius O'Shaughnessy suggested assuming joint responsibility with Ben Inglepin.

"Blood me for a fool, Captain, but 'tain't in the naachure of a maan to see a lady the like o' her put up in the dock with a parcel o' highwaymen and coin-clippers! So if 'tis all the same to ye, just throw me in irons, and I'll swear out a declaration I was for murtherin' every dirty politician in Washington. Or put it how ye will. Shure, we can saay 'twas me wrote the letter and all."

An overpowering conviction of meanness, of unescapable malice, tore at Fellowes' heart. A voice within him cried that here was a stronger force than hate, but a second voice issued drily from his mouth.

"I fear you are the victim of your emotions, doctor. Treason is not a crime to be condored."

"She knows no more o' treason nor I do of Boney's gizzard," flared O'Shaughnessy. "The poor lady maybe made a mistake, but I'll take me oath there's not a morsel of haarm in her."

"Natheless, she must pay for it." And as the Irishman opened his mouth to reply, Fellowes fell back upon the same argument he had offered Sopher: "The lady, being what she is, will not suffer another to assume her responsibilities."

It was probably from O'Shaughnessy, whose tongue wagged freest, that Cara learned of Fellowes' determination to fight the Badger. Their habit was to exchange the briefest of greetings, but the day the wind swung astern and the sun came out boldly she crossed the deck to where he stood, sweeping the horizon with his glass.

"Do you look for the Badger, Captain Fellowes?" she asked.

"Not yet, ma'am," he answered, choking his surprise.

Her hands clasped together nervously. There was aching appeal in the eyes that met his.

"Oh, sir—is it not sufficient that we—my father and I—should be punished? Captain Collishawe is not responsible for what we did. He acted as an enemy, to serve his king. And he had his orders—from Commodore Hardy, from Admiral Cockburn. And my Lord Wellington was behind them all, for 'twas he supported us with the ministry."

Fellowes forced himself to speak, harshly, mechanically.

"Captain Collishawe is, as you say, an enemy, ma'am. As an enemy, 'tis my duty to destroy him."

"But to seek him out! To hunt him—as one beast hunts another! Must you and James, you two of all the world, be deadly enemies for—for—" her voice sank to a whisper—"my mistake?"

She trembled so that he put out his arm to steady her, conscious of the curious glances of the officers on the far side of the poop; his mind was in a whirl—hate, jealousy, pity, anger, resentment and an emotion he would not name, even to himself, boiling and seething in one nauseous brew. Touching her, he had a mad desire to embrace her, to cover her mouth with kisses. If that was his price, she'd pay, he had no doubt. She was no coward. But he heard himself say gently:

"You make too much of this, Miss Inglepin. We are all on the rack of fate."

"Fate?" she repeated, drawing away from him. "You should say hate. 'Tis an ill thing, sir, and recoils upon him who sponsors it."

Fellowes bowed his head.

"That is a point you need not argue with me," he said. "I have set myself a task, and I am bound in honor to complete it."

"To slay James?" Her voice rang scornfully. "You are over-confident."

"It may be." He paused, fumbling for words to phrase his thought. "If I might, I'd serve you. I shall have no happiness of what I do. And yet I hate him! I hate him as I hated Chater—and what satisfaction have I had from Chater's death? But I'll not rest until he's punished—or I am dead."

Her face was tragic; there was no scorn in her voice when she replied:

"Yes, you are a proud man. And I am a proud woman. If my back had been beaten raw, I'd hate, too. Oh, you do well to hate, Lion! But 'tis me you should hate. You should tie me to the mast there, and flog me as James flogged you, flog me while your sailors look on, and lick their lips and gloat as men do at sight of another's pain. Wouldn't that satisfy you? For I deserve it, I who have brought you to enmity, two men—"

Her voice broke in a wail, and Fellowes beckoned O'Shaughnessy to him.

"Conduct Miss Inglepin below, doctor. She is too have every attention. You understand?"

The Irishman gave him a saturnine glare.

"Aye, and 'tis more than ye do, Captain, God forgive ye! There, now, alanna, come along with Aloysius."

* * * * * * *

Westward drove the Centurian, topmasts whipping from the fidds, lee rigging slack; but so keenly did Fellowes watch her that she never carried away a spar, despite the press of sail he kept her under. There was no more grumbling as they neared their goal. The sea lawyers of the fo'c's'le had discovered that the sinking of an enemy's sloop of war must be rewarded by a handsome grant from congress—"Didn't the Constitution's crew git fifty thousan' dollars for the Guerriere?"

Her Face Was Tragic; There Was No Scorn in Her Voice When She Replied.

Gradually, the Centurian's company came to understand the practical reasons for her unusual armament. All sea-faring men knew the Yankee frigates were heavier built, heavier armed. They could outsail their enemies, and their batteries could outrange any craft below a line-o'-battle ship. And precisely so, the Centurian could outsail and outrange the Badger.

Next to the Long Tom, which he had named the "Big Sarpent," Cuffee worshiped Cara Inglepin. "Him pitty ill missee" was the one person aboard, except Fellowes, who was tolerated about when the negro was swabbing and wiping his pet.

Not the least of Fellowes' worries during this latter stage of the voyage was Cara's health. After his refusal to abandon the quest of the Badger, she remained secluded in her cabin for three days, and he knew, from Ben Inglepin's furious looks as well as O'Shaughnessy's resentful reports, that she was a sick woman—"on the bare edge of brain fever, Captain, and no fault o' your's, if I save her from that same." At O'Shaughnessy's urgence, she was fetched on deck as soon as the fever abated, and the air and sunshine put new strength in her; but there was a shadow on her face that wrung Fellowes' heart, and the circles beneath her eyes were gouged deeper with every week the Centurion bore on into the west.

Volunteer Messenger

Here is what President Wilson said was the best negro war yarn he had heard during his stay in Paris. It is quoted by J. F. Essary in "Covering Washington." A group of negro soldiers were in a front line trench on the eve of an attack. A white officer approached one of them and asked:

"What would you do, Jim, if you suddenly saw the whole German cavalry coming straight at you?"

"What would I do, boss?" repeated Jim. "Why, I sure would spread the news through France."

Only a Dozen Bananas

Robert made his first week-end trip alone to visit his aunt in a nearby town. The aunt was aroused in the night on the day of his arrival by a very sick boy.

Observing symptoms of an overloaded stomach, she said:

"Robert, did you buy any trash and eat it on the train coming out"

"No, auntie, I didn't have a thing except a dozen bananas," replied the distressed lad.

Analyzing ...YOU...

With the New Science of Syllabics

By C. J. COFFMAN
Dean of All the Enumerators

Edna

Out of the mist that covers you, Edna, can come the things that are grand and true. Though calamity and destruction may have had their part in the past, you must remember that these cannot last.

The Fingers of Edna.

Your first syllable, ED, has its best meaning in the phrase, "The witness from the mist." Out of the most obscure beginnings, the most vague hints, you can make a story.

Possibly you may not know that you can write, but your strong, capable fingers indicate this very clearly to me.

These writings of yours should contain a bit of mysticism, those vague psychological longings that we all know about, but find it hard to describe.

Your descriptions of pleasant places should reach the hearts of many. Won't you try? It may be so much worth while.

There is something beseeching about your last syllable, NA. When the ancients used this phrase, they really meant to express the idea of sweet and beseeching prayer, irresistible in its powers.

Among the Greeks the basic meaning of NA was verily, or of a truth.

You are the namesake of one who has combined all of these attributes after years of patient study and work. When I name her, you will know her, for I have no doubt you have read her. She is Edna Ferber, the successful novelist.

What Edna has done Edna can do. So come out from your obscurity and do the big thing you so well can do.

* * *

Elizabeth

Prophetic ability is one of your strong points, as your first syllable would show us, the EL signifying God in the language of the ancients.

In fact, your first three letters, ELI, constitute the beginning syllable of some wonderful prophets, notably Elijah and Elisha.

Eli himself is a character of some import in the Bible.

A Vigorous, Erect Back.

Your name really presents quite an assortment of meanings, if we take the syllables apart. Among these might be noted power, strength and virginity.

Your erect, fine carriage and straight back would indicate a determination to carry this virginity into the attributes of mind, as well as body. It gives you independence of thought and directness of mental action, not possessed by many.

In times past, this virgin intent of mind and body has attracted the more ardent wooing by its very existence. This was most noticeable in Queen Elizabeth of England. Possessing statesmanship to a degree seldom equaled, she also possessed a very human heart. Most of her cruelties were simply an expression of her rebellion against woman's greatest loss, the lack of an ardent, true lover.

Success and a career cannot compensate for this loss, and your greatest single asset is the home and family. For this you must continually labor, making all else secondary.

Elizabeths there have been who were great in their careers but the happiest Elizabeths have been those unknown to fame, who succeeded in building a happy though humble home.

I do hope that your aspirations, your desire for big things will not lead you to select the wrong thing, Elizabeth. What the world calls the big things are by no means the best things. They are only good insofar as they contribute to the best things. You are probably as able as I to pick out the best things. They are legion, but their name is Love.

Blame Wireless Waves for Deaths of Pigeons

English pigeon fanciers are blaming wireless waves for the loss of many valuable birds. Lord Dewar, who owns some of the finest racing pigeons in the country, has lost about thirty birds this season, and one of the assistants on his Grinstead (Sussex) estate said recently that it was believed they had lost their way owing to the disturbed atmospheric conditions. Other fanciers owning hundreds of birds reported losses which could not be accounted for in the ordinary way. Prof. A. M. Low expresses the opinion that pigeons lose their sense of direction when wireless waves put their "mental integrator" out of action. "Everybody," he says, "agrees that the brain is entirely electrical, and I think it is distinctly possible that these pigeons have become helpless when flying near broadcasting stations."

Not Complete Success

A new cruising detail of the San Francisco police force was put through some tests in the early part of a morning not long ago. A pseudo bank holdup brought the entire district personnel to the bank in four minutes. During the following hour the pseudo fleeing car was stopped in various parts of the city and tests were pronounced a 100 per cent success. But, while all this was going on, two robbers in an automobile made three holdups and escaped.

YOUNG MEN AND WOMEN WHO THINK CLEARLY THE GREATEST DEMAND OF AMERICAN BUSINESS

Bankers Association President Gives the Five Essentials of Sound Thinking in Business—Greater Opportunity Than Ever Before for Young People With Educational Training and Power to Analyze Problems.

By CRAIG B. HAZLEWOOD
President American Bankers Association

CRAIG B. HAZLEWOOD

ONLY half a century ago Michael Pupin, a shepherd boy, guarded his flocks by night among the fields of Serbia. Thieves often lurked in the bordering cornfields awaiting an opportunity to make off with a part of the herd. Serbian boys were taught a method of signalling one another for warning and help. Each carried a knife with a long wooden handle which he would thrust deep into the ground and in case cattle thieves approached he would strike the wooden handle. The sound would be transmitted through the ground to other boys some distance away who could hear and interpret the message.

"Why is it," Pupin asked his mother, "that we can signal this way? Why is it the sound can be heard through the ground, but not through the air? Why is it the signals can be heard in the pasture land so much better than in the plowed fields?" The boy's mother could not answer his questions, nor could the village teacher. However, having an eager mind and great determination, the boy decided to go to America, where he might win an education and find out the answers to these and other perplexing questions. Hundreds of other boys under the same circumstances and with the same set of conditions merely accepted these things without once questioning them just because they had always done them that way.

The Land of Education and Success

So a penniless immigrant boy from Serbia at the age of fifteen landed in New York in 1874 and, years later, having worked his way through Columbia University, concentrated the wonder and simplicity of his mind upon the problem of sound, which had puzzled him as a shepherd boy. The results of his thinking—what he has accomplished for the long distance telephone and for radio communication by his inventions—are known the world over. "If during the past twenty-two years this company had been compelled to do without one invention of Michael Pupin," an official of the American Telephone and Telegraph Company once said, "and yet give the same service it is giving today it would have had to spend at least $100,000,000 more than it has expended."

These inventions, in which millions of dollars of capital have been invested, were the result of the thinking of a mere country lad who had the simplicity to wonder, the determination to know and the power to apply what he learned.

Stimulating the imagination and thinking is the greatest purpose of education. What American business needs more than anything else is young men and women to think—individuals who are not mentally anchored to tradition, who do not merely appropriate other people's ideas, but who are hard, purposeful thinkers, independent and unprejudiced, with the ability to concentrate and strike straight for the heart of a problem.

Business Needs Folk Who Think

America has astounded the world by its readiness in casting aside traditional viewpoints, disregarding traditional difficulties and pioneering new shortcut formulas in the realm of business. Business is undergoing epochal changes.

Business problems are crowding in upon us so rapidly that the executive knows not where to look for adequate help or relief. With the enormous increase in size and intricacy of business affairs the problems have become so complicated and the mass of information necessary to their solution so great that the "days are not long enough." The demand for managerial and executive ability is rushing ahead—the opportunity for young men and women who have the professional training and who develop genuine thinking power is greater than ever.

All business feels the same crying need for the men who see clearly and think conclusively. Wherever we look—manufacturing, wholesaling, retailing, banking, financing—new forces are at work. Vast movements are under way and executives are seeking light upon perplexing problems daily.

Let us consider briefly the five essentials of a sound thinker. If I were looking for a young man of exceptional promise I should hope, first, to find in him the simplicity to wonder. Every great advancement in business has been made by men who dared to wonder, who had the courage to inquire into present procedure and who had the audacity to ask whether something that had been done a certain way for a long time might not be wrong. Although the history of America's progress from its very discovery to the present time has shown the value of an inquiring mind, there is still an inevitable tendency in most men to accept in a docile manner the opinions, methods, supposed facts, procedures and processes of the past. With due reverence to the effort, the spirit, the accomplishments of the past, let us make it our rule that everything be looked at with the clear questioning mind of the scientist.

Business Requires an Open Mind

Second, among the essentials for sound thinking I would write down an open mind. We have mentioned freeing our minds from the influence of tradition. Let us think also without prejudice of personal feelings, desires or consequence. Let us seek only the truth. Mere surface reasoning must be discounted. Old "can'ts" and "don'ts" must be thrown into the discard. A man who has an open mind will do a great many things because he doesn't know they can't be done.

The third essential to sound thinking is knowledge—a thorough, comprehensive understanding of all the factors involved in a problem. It has been said that most problems answer themselves when the facts have been gathered. A well known student and teacher of business describes the method of attacking a problem as tearing it down, reassembling the problem and drawing the conclusion. There can be nothing but guess work or intuition unless the unknown quantities are discovered.

As a fourth essential sound thinking requires the capacity to generalize. How often we have seen men sweating and confused before a mass of details which they were utterly unable to classify and crystallize. We have the problem of sorting out the relevant, attaining a perspective and reaching a conclusion that can be defended against any attack. To certain minds this procedure comes naturally; to others training in the solution of complicated problems points the way out.

The Time for Action

Fifth among the essentials of sound thinking is the power to apply. A few individuals have minds that travel at random or in circles. Some have minds that even refuse to budge. But there are still others who naturally or through training have minds that can be directed straight through to the practical application of their thoughts. They refuse to compromise or to be thwarted in purpose before definite application of their ideas has been achieved.

It is possible, I believe, for young people to train themselves to an inquisitive attitude, an open mind and the ability to classify and interpret material step by step from the beginning of a problem to its final solution and application. Here, then, is the thought I would leave—the paramount need of business is sound thinking. Some may think I have overstated the case, have set too high a standard. They may feel that they are merely cogs in a machine. That, too, is a part of the problem. The only way to solve that is to find time and place in the day's work for thinking.

SCHOOL SAVINGS BANKING MOVEMENT REACHES IMPRESSIVE PROPORTIONS

Almost 14,000 of America's schools now have school savings banking plans in operation, and about four million pupils are learning systematic savings through this type of thrift, with deposits in excess of $26,000,000, recent reports of the American Bankers Association's Savings Bank Division show. The schools included in the reports are attended by 4,609,825 pupils, of whom 3,980,237 are participants in the school savings banking plans as depositors. During the year these pupils received interest in the amount of $947,610 on their deposits.

The reports gathered by the association also show that there are 38 cities in the United States in which a full 100 per cent of the grammar school enrollment is participating in school savings banking. The figures covering high schools show that in 47 cities 100 per cent of the attendance in this class are school savers.

Delinquent Tax List

For Marshall County, Minnesota, for the Year 1928

State of Minnesota,
County of Marshall—ss.

District Court,
14th Judicial District.

THE STATE OF MINNESOTA, to all Persons, Companies or Corporations, who have or claim any estate, right, title or interest in, claim to, or lien upon, any of the several pieces or parcels of land in the list hereto attached described:

The list of taxes and penalties on real property for the County of Marshall remaining delinquent on the first Monday in January, 1930, has been filed in the office of the Clerk of the District Court of said County, of which that hereto attached is a copy.

THEREFORE, You, and each of you, are hereby required to file in the office of said Clerk, on or before the twentieth day after the publication of this notice and list, your answer in writing, setting forth any objection or defense you may have to the taxes, or any part thereof, upon any parcel of land described in said list, in, to, or on which you have or claim any estate, right, title, interest, claim or lien, and in default thereof, judgment will be entered against such parcel for the taxes on said list appearing against it, and for all penalties, interest and cost.

You are further notified that at the expiration of five years from the date of the tax judgment sale pursuant to such judgment, each parcel of land sold at such sale, and not redeemed, will become and be the absolute property of the purchaser or of the state, or of his or its assigns, without further right of redemption and without any notice of expiration of the time to redeem the same.

Dated February 5th, 1930.

HOW TO SAVE MONEY WHEN SHOPPING

SELECTING THE BEDSPRING

In spite of the fifty-seven varieties of nightmare, there are really only four distinct types of bed springs, the woven wire, the link fabric, the spiral and the box springs. A few words about the advantages and disadvantages of each will help you to choose.

The woven wire spring is in reality a steel hammock attached to a steel frame. In one type this steel hammock is attached to the frame directly, providing for an even distribution of weight. Nevertheless, it will sag, and when once stretched, there is no way by which the original tautness can be restored. Another type has the wire netting attached to the frame at the head and foot by a row of coil springs. This form of suspension prevents sagging under all ordinary usage, and even if stretching occurs it can be corrected by simply renewing the coils. It is important that this point be kept in mind when buying, for the worst complaint that can be made against bed springs is that they stretch and sag under the weight of the body. The woven wire springs are the cheapest on the market.

The link fabric spring is made up of sections that consist of four steel wires linked together, making an open square about four inches wide. This spring is also attached to the frame by strong coil springs, as in the better makes of the woven wire type. When stretched out of shape, this spring can be repaired either by replacing the coils or inserting new links. For a medium-priced article the link fabric gives excellent service.

The open spiral spring is a set of upright spirals, on the same order as those used in upholstering furniture. One type, for wooden beds, sets directly on the slats, while a better style is swung on a steel framework above cross wires or flat steel bands. It is a comfortable spring, but has the disadvantage that it is harder to clean than the link or woven wire.

The box spring is made upon still a different design. It has spiral springs of tempered steel, over which is laid a padding like a thin mattress, and the whole covered with ticking. In some grades this ticking is tufted on top like a mattress and in others it is not.

This type of spring is the most expensive, the cost varying with the quality and amount of the top filling. It can, however, be bought without the upholstery.

Being inclosed in ticking, the box springs are the most difficult of all to clean. Practically the only successful way is to use a vacuum cleaner. The other types, not encased, are cleaned by brushing with a stiff bristle brush.

Mother's Job

BY O. LAWRENCE HAWTHORNE

No sooner do the early rays of daylight
Peek through the windows where our children sleep,
Than someone calls her back from fitful slumber
A mother's daily vigilance to keep.
"Oh, Mother, Phil's awake!" Dick yells, "Come, see him!"
"Say, Mother," Bower shouts "Bob's got my tie!"
And so her day begins—a day of service,
Where duties press and problems multiply.

It's Mother's job, it seems, to do the thinking
For all her boys—and sometimes for their Dad!
It's Mother's job to answer all the questions,
To know exactly where each careless lad
Has left each toy, each article of clothing.
It's Mother's job to tell them what to eat,
And when, and how (an ever-vexing problem);
And Mother must prepare each festive treat.

Oh, what an endless drudgery of mending
The garments that are, somehow, torn each day!
Oh, what a task of mending little heartaches,
And healing little bodies bruised at play!
A mother's job is one of constant service,
And yet each moment brings her heart new joy;
Her only genuine delight in living
Is caring for her baby girl or boy.

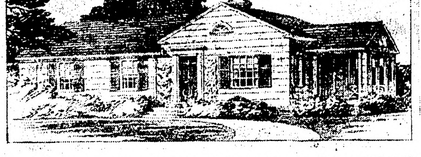
This Six-Room Bungalow Adapts Self to Any Lot



THERE is much to be said in favor of the one-story dwelling, and when the floor plan is as expertly arranged as in this Colonial bungalow the usual objections of lack of privacy and long distances to walk, are avoided.

This house may run either lengthwise or across the width of the lot. The exterior is of stained grey shingles with either a green shingled or tiled roof. The trimmings should be white and the shutters green to harmonize with the roof.

The three bedrooms are well shut off from the rest of the house. The large open porch or sunroom can be made to open off either the living or dining room. The kitchen has the desired built-in features, including the useful breakfast nook.

The cost of this house can be materially reduced by omitting the basement and allowing space on the main floor for a small boiler room. The walls and roof also are sheathed with celotex to keep the temperature at comfort point the year round.

23 ENUMERATORS TO TAKE 1930 CENSUS

Census Bureau For District at Crookston Makes Division For County —Begins On April 2

Marshall county has been divided into 23 districts for the purpose of taking the farm and population census for 1930 which will be started on April 2, according to advices received today from Ninth District U. S. Census Bureau at Crookston.

All the enumerators and other employees of the Census Bureau are sworn to secrecy under severe penalties, and assessors and others connected with the levying and collection of taxes are barred from employment in connection with the Census. Individual statements will not be given out, but will be used as units in making up the National Inventory of people and property.

Besides the questions asked 10 years ago, you will be asked whether you own a radio and whether you are out of employment. The farm schedule is quite complete and when the enumerator comes, you will have to figure on taking an hour off to give him the information he asks for.

The districts in Marshall county have been divided as follows:

A—Agdar and Excel.
B—Alma and McCrea.
C—Alvarado and Vega.
D—Argyle, Bloomer and Middle River township.
E—Augsburg and Wanger.
F—Big Woods and Fork.
G—Boxville, Warren and Warrenton.
H—Cedar, Como, Thief Lake and Whiteford.
I—Comstock, Viking and Viking village.
J—Donnelly, Eagle Point and Parker.
K—East Park, Lincoln, and Strandquist.
L—East Valley, Eckvoll, Grand Plain and Mud Lake.
M—Esplee, Grygla, Moylan and Valley.
N—Foldahl and Marsh Grove.
O—Holt, township and village.
P—Huntley, Middle River village and Spruce Valley.
Q—Linsell, Moose River, Rollis and Veldt.
R—Nelson Park and Wright.
S—Newfolden, village and township.
T—New Maine, and West Valley.
U—Oak Park and Oslo.
V—Sinnott, Stephen and Tamarac.

New Solum township will have a separate enumerator.

The enumerators are paid 4c per capita in cities; 5c in villages; 8c in the country except in sparsely settled districts where they get 10c per capita. Marshall county townships under this classification are: Agdar, Cedar, Como, Donnelly, East Park, East Valley, Eckvoll, Esplee, Foldahl, Grand Plain, Huntley, Linsell, Moose River, Moylan, Mud Lake, New Maine, Parker, Thief Lake, Veldt and Whiteford. Farm Schedules 70c each.

TRUNK HIGHWAY COSTS SMALL PART OF BILL

A striking analysis of recently published figures showing the total motor bill in Minnesota for 1929 is contained in a bulletin just issued by the Minnesota Good Roads Association.

In comparing trunk highway costs with the total bill, it is shown that they are relatively low when the tremendous burden of traffic on the state system is considered.

The total outlay for vehicles, gas, oil, licenses, accessories and taxes amounts to $372,000,000, an average of $510 per car or $[illegible] per capita.

Receipts from license fees, gas tax and local road taxes total $[illegible]. Of this $22,150,000 is spent for state aid, county and township roads and represents $19,500,000 received from local and the one mill state [illegible] and $2,500,000 from one third of the gas tax.

The receipts for trunk highways totaled $16,100,000 which is made up of $10,760,000 received from license fees and $5,350,000 representing two thirds of the gas tax.

Ten per cent of the total motor bill was used for highways of which four per cent went toward [illegible] miles of trunk highways, which carry seventy-five per cent of the traffic, and six per cent for 103,315 miles of state aid, county and township roads which carry twenty-five per cent of the traffic.

Despite the constantly increasing motor bill, the cost per vehicle mile is decreasing due to the increasing mileage of hard surfaced highways.

The bulletin further states that an enlarged paving program will still further reduce the vehicle mile cost of car operation.

YOUTH--AND THE NEW LEADERSHIP

By CRAIG B. HAZLEWOOD
President American Bankers Association

Craig B. Hazlewood

LEADERSHIP is a picturesque word. With it, one pictures Hannibal fighting his way through the passes of the Alps—Napoleon in his campaigns—or Washington holding together his half-frozen army by the sheer magnetism of his character at Valley Forge. But I visualize something that holds a more astounding spectacle in many respects than any of these. It is the onrush of our business life. Our economic progress plunges ahead at a rate unheard of in the history of the nations of the world and every industrial and financial leader is daily brought face to face with new and perplexing problems requiring the highest courage and intelligence for their solution.

Ninety billions a year, they tell us, this country is now producing in new wealth. The rate of increase is even more staggering than the amount. It is difficult to say where it may lead us in even ten or fifteen years.

We are moving exceptionally fast. Our economic and industrial structure is placing before us problems of greater and greater magnitude. Few men can see far ahead. Few are in complete control, for this is a changing world, as even the most inexperienced business man will readily testify. Our methods of adjusting ourselves rapidly to economic changes and of cooperating are far from perfect.

What an opportunity the leadership of five, ten or fifteen years from now presents! What an adventure it will be! What responsibilities it will lay upon the broadest shoulders that may be found! This is the challenge to leadership as I see it. In the hands of the young men must rest the responsibility for this leadership.

Boys Who Reached the Pinnacles

Business is full of the romance of youngsters whose chief characteristic was working hard and keeping at it. There was a green farmer boy who decided he would rather stand behind a counter than follow a plow. He seemed so obviously lacking in sales ability that for a time no merchant would hire him. He failed in his first position, and in his second his salary was reduced. He even agreed that he was a misfit—but he stuck. Out of his first five stores, I believe, three failed. But he persisted and worked hard. And that boy, Frank W. Woolworth, became the greatest retail merchant in the world with a store in every city of eight thousand or more population in this country.

There was another lad who clerked in a grocery store sixteen hours a day and studied mathematics in his odd moments. He became interested in the doings of the steel plant whose employees traded at this store. He began to study steel and sought a position in the plant. He carried a surveyor's chain and drove stakes. At night he studied mathematics and engineering. He did not despair. He could not be diverted. He kept the pressure on for seven years. And that boy, Charles Schwab, mastered the iron industry and became one of the country's great industrial leaders.

There was a lad who sold papers on a train. When he grew up, several million men and a score of billions of dollars of capital were given profitable employment through his inventions. Even in middle life, Thomas Edison continued to work twenty hours a day, if necessary to achieve his purpose.

Leadership is not play. Leadership offers countless positions of varying opportunity, of which the highest pinnacles will mean almost unbearable responsibility in the new era. There will be men with the fire and iron to qualify even for these places. Such men must have had the very finest preparation and the most grueling tests. Their reward will be the attainment of these highest pinnacles of achievement, and the rendering of an immeasurable service to their times.

MAIL BOX THEFTS AID CHECK FORGERS

American Bankers Association in Nationwide Warning Exposes Methods and Gives Rules to Combat Them.

NEW YORK.—Active operations in many cities of mail box thieves, who open bank communications to customers, containing details of their accounts and cancelled checks showing their banking signatures, and use this material in perpetrating check forgeries, have led the American Bankers Association to issue a nation-wide warning to its members with instructions for combating this form of crime. The warning as sent out by James E. Baum in charge of the association's Protective Department says:

"Heavy losses are being sustained through cancelled vouchers and statements stolen from the mail boxes of bank depositors in apartment and office buildings, thus divulging the depositors' balances and supplying models for forged checks. As a step to put customers on guard against these methods, banks are urged to instruct every depositor to whom they mail statements of deposit accounts on the last business day of each month to notify them promptly if such statement are not received by the close of the next day.

"Also banks should educate depositors to safeguard blank checks and cancelled vouchers as they would money. Such paper stolen by forgers soon puts real money in their hands. If all blank checks and cancelled vouchers were securely kept in safes instead of filing cabinets or desks, the check crooks would be denied their chief stock in trade, namely, genuine blank checks and signatures. Warnings to depositors against leaving blank or cancelled checks accessible to sneak thieves or burglars should be sent out at once.

"Estimates broadcast by surety companies indicate that individuals, merchants, hotels and others outside of banking are shouldering more than 99 per cent of the total amount of forgery losses. The bulk of forgery loss on checks is sustained by those who are willing to risk accepting them without reliable proof of identity or title of the presenter.

"Years ago the Protective Department of the American Bankers Association adopted the slogan, 'Strangers are not always crooks, but crooks are usually strangers.' If those outside of banking could be prevailed upon to observe this rule and think about it when considering accepting a check for their merchandise or services, for which they are also asked to give a substantial sum in cash in change, one of the biggest aids to the forgery business would be denied the crooks."

SCRUB BULL IS HALED TO COURT

Placed on Trial for Hindering Development and Prosperity of Dairy Industry.

Indicted for robbery, larceny, and a few other such charges, Scrub Bull went on trial for his life at Laurel, Mississippi, recently. It seems that for some time people had suspicions that Mr. Bull was hindering the right and lawful development of the dairy industry, thereby "maliciously and wilfully lowering production and decreasing profits in the dairy business," says the Bulletin of the American Bankers Association Agricultural Commission in commenting on the case.

This, it says, was the first trial of its kind ever held in that section and was attended by several hundred people. The jury, representing every vocation within the boundaries of the Laurel trade territory, rendered a unanimous verdict of "guilty." The death sentence was pronounced, "but during the night, before the sentence could be carried out, friends of the convict secretly spirited him away and he has not been seen since."

The arraignment came during the Milk Products Show sponsored by the banks of Laurel. People attending the show had the opportunity of also attending the bull's "trial" and went away firmly convinced of the seriousness of lax and out-of-date methods in the pursuit of dairying. The purposes of both the Milk Products Show and the trial were threefold, namely: to develop public sentiment for more and better Jerseys; to foster a more cooperative spirit for dairying and livestock growing, and to promote tick eradication.

The banks of Laurel entered into a cooperative arrangement in their efforts for fostering agricultural development and successful farming in the community, offering $2,165 as premiums to the outstanding farm workers throughout the territory during 1929. An instructive booklet has been issued, showing the agricultural activity of the banks, together with announcements of contests for farmers, exhibits in the bank lobbies and prizes offered.

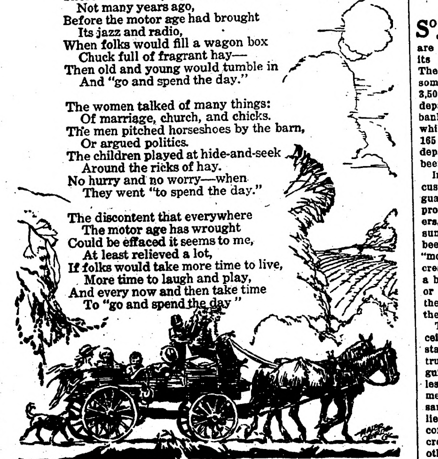
BANKERS DEVELOP NOVEL INSTITUTE

The Georgia Bankers Association in cooperation with the State College of Agriculture has sponsored a series of farmers' institutes in various parts of the State of an entirely new character. The principle feature is a large and comprehensive exhibit transported in four large trucks and set up at each stop. When set up it fills a space 40 by 60 feet and consists of panels, charts, and models on practically every phase of agriculture, including agronomy, horticulture, agricultural engineering, poultry, animal husbandry, soils and fertilizers, home economics and marketing. A large electrified farm model, showing the uses of electricity on the farm, model farm buildings and the ideal layout and landscaping of the farmstead, is one of the most elaborate and attractive exhibits.

Local bankers in each locality visited gave the money to cover expenses for the transportation and installation of the exhibit in their territory and assisted in the preliminary advertising and publicity. The College of Agriculture assembled the exhibit and conducted the tour through its various extension specialists.

"Go, and spend the day"

by A. J. Dunlap



There was a time, a good old time,
Not many years ago,
Before the motor age had brought
Its jazz and radio,
When folks would fill a wagon box
Chuck full of fragrant hay—
Then old and young would tumble in
And "go and spend the day."

The women talked of many things:
Of marriage, church, and chicks.
The men pitched horseshoes by the barn,
Or argued politics.
The children played at hide-and-seek
Around the ricks of hay.
No hurry and no worry—when
They went "to spend the day."

The discontent that everywhere
The motor age has wrought
Could be effaced it seems to me,
At least relieved a lot,
If folks would take more time to live,
More time to laugh and play,
And every now and then take time
To "go and spend the day."

PLACING your house according to your lot is the privilege of the person who builds this practical dwelling of the English farm house type. The entrance is so arranged that the house may either be placed lengthwise for a thirty-foot city lot or crosswise for a 60 or 75 foot lot.

The design here calls for a combination of stucco and stained siding with roof or dark weathered shingles. The pleasing features of the living room include its windows on three sides, open fire place and built-in book shelves. The open porch or sunroom may open off from either the living or dining room. The kitchen has all the details that delight the housewife—cupboards, broom closet, breakfast nook and double windows over the sink.

The three bedrooms all have double exposures and are well provided with clothes and linen closets. The bathroom is so placed as to be equally accessible from each bedroom. The attic is ventilated and makes a serviceable storage or playroom by sheathing the rafters and sides with celotex, which serves both as a wall-board and insulating material.

This small home so light and spacious, yet compact and adapted to doing without a servant, is a typical 1926 product. The poky, dark houses of fifteen or even ten years ago with their fussy little hallways and poor planning would be scorned by the modern housewife who has learned to expect comfort built right into her home and to have everything planned for her convenience in working. Cold, draughty houses are also out of date. All well built houses, are insulated as this one is, with celotex sheathing on the exterior walls under the stucco. This effects a great saving in fuel in the winter and resists the intense heat of the sun in summer.

Celotechnic Institute Studies Home Builders' Problems

B. G. Dahlberg.

THE Celotechnic Institute of America was recently established, with head quarters in Chicago, to study the problems of American home builders and to place at their disposal the latest discoveries in scientific construction.

It is the aim of B. G. Dahlberg, its founder, to delve into all home building problems and to give to the American public the benefit of its research work and to supply the very latest data on most modern building practices.

It will be a veritable laboratory of building facts including structural problems, modern plans, roof and floor insulation, building trends, analysis, laboratory tests, experimentation in refrigeration, sheathing and interior finishes.

"Important discoveries are constantly being made which practically revolutionize previous home building methods" declares Mr. Dahlberg. "In all the facts we give the public we will have an eye on economy, as well as utility, comfort, health and beauty. It is the aim of the Institute to help the home builder build better homes without any material increase in the cost of construction. It will be a real service bureau for the home builder."

Mr. Dahlberg is among the youngest of America's captains of industry. Born in Sweden, the early part of his life in America was spent in railroading, a good portion of it as an associate of the late James J. Hill, the great empire builder of the Northwest. In more recent years he has been prominently identified with a number of large construction projects. A vision of great efficiency and economy in building, growing out of his experience, finally led to the decision to establish the Institute

By JOHN G. LONSDALE
President American Bankers Association

John G. Lonsdale

SO phenomenal has been the increase of trust business that statisticians are unable to keep a true record of its advancement. There are now something like 3,500 active trust departments in banks in America, while in 1900 only 165 active trust departments had been established.

In becoming the custodians or the guardians of the property of others, bankers assume what has been fittingly described as one of the "most exalted human relationships ever created by law." They become at once a big brother, a big sister, an advisor, or a confessor, sworn so to conduct themselves that clients will be won to them by their ability and integrity.

Thousands of little children have received an education and have been started off right in life through the trust department's safe keeping and guidance of the family estate, numberless widows have been protected from merciless stock swindlers, many thousands of business men have been relieved of troublesome details in the conduct of their business through the creation of a living trust and still others have safeguarded their business enterprises through life insurance trusts.

The favorable reaction of the public toward trust department service is not accidental. It may be traced jointly to the growing intelligence of the American people in financial affairs and to advertising to the world at large the merits of trust services. Advertising used in a sensible, judicious way is necessary, a power that has accomplished much good for humanity.

Among the detailed services rendered by a trust department the one that seems to be winning favor the fastest is the life insurance trust. Life insurance is the quickest known way of creating an estate. In reality it affords the possessor the opportunity of setting up a positive monetary safeguard for his family and then paying for it on the installment plan.

A married man is not fair to his family if he fails to carry life insurance. I would say to the young man, "Buy insurance before you buy the ring," and to the young woman I would say, "Marry no man so thoughtless as to scoff at life insurance."

MODERN EDUCATION REVERSES OLD IDEAS

Business Institutes Use the Plan of Getting People to Think Rather Than Merely to Learn

There is one general principle at the basis of all good teaching and it is that a person learns more readily by assimilating the experiences which he himself encounters than in any other way, says Harold Stonier, National Educational Director of the American Institute of Banking. This institute is the educational section of the American Bankers Association through which 35,000 bank men and women are receiving scientific instruction in their chosen business.

"The most advanced people in teaching today are emphasizing the importance of activity on the part of the student," he says. "In the schoolroom of former days we often heard such phrases as, 'Be still,' 'Learn by heart,' 'Don't do that,' 'What does the book say?' The newer education asks, 'What do you think?,' 'What was your reaction to that experiment?,' 'What did you discover?,' 'What reasons have you for your answer?'

The New School Calls for Action

"The 'expressing' school is taking the place of the repressing and listening school. The classroom is becoming an open forum, a studio of self-expression, a place of mental growth. The modern concepts of education are personal experimentation, individual investigation, critical discussion and creative self-expression. The pupil really learns only as he is able to assimilate the new meanings of facts and principles with his previous experiences. Activities therefore constitute the pivotal force around which are grouped the new factors in education. The primary responsibility of the teacher is to furnish a constant stream of activities which will afford the stimulating urge to mental growth.

"Education is a process of experiencing, and the program of the institute is so arranged as to give the greatest opportunity to gain by each experience. Through this we develop the art of thinking. Thinking has been described as the ability to handle experience and to bring it to bear on a problem. Effective thinking arises when we are presented with the choice of conduct. Our previous experiences become helpful as we marshal them and bring them to bear upon the matter of our choice."

The students in the American Institute of Banking by reason of the fact that they continue to go on about their employment in banks while taking the banking association's study courses have an opportunity to combine learning with practical thinking and action.

BANKERS FIND GROUP BANKING WIDESPREAD

Over 13 Billion Dollars of Bank Assets in Affiliated Systems Numbering 1,850 Members—In Nearly Every State.

Over 1,850 banks with more than thirteen billion dollars in resources are shown to be associated with chain or group banking systems in the United States in facts recently gathered by the Economic Policy Commission of the American Bankers Association. The chairman of the commission, R. S. Hecht of New Orleans, pointed out that the facts indicate that "almost 7½ per cent of our banks and over 18 per cent of our banking resources are in the great net of group or chain banking that now covers almost every part of the country."

The commission's facts comprised chain and group banking affiliations in the broadest sense of the term, the report said. They included those groups in which the controlling element was a particular bank, there being reported 78 instances of this class involving 107 banks and about $6,473,000,000 in combined banking resources. They included also groups in which a non-banking holding company, not subsidiary to any particular bank, was in control and of this class 28 instances were found, involving 380 banks and nearly $5,335,000,000 in resources. The report also included groupings in which control was exercised by individual persons and these cases numbered 167, involving 1,071 banks and about $1,463,000,000 in assets.

The Total Figures

The total was over $13,275,000,000 in aggregate resources. Some of the systems comprised 50 to 100 banks each. Head offices of the groups were found in all jurisdictions, but nine of the states and the District of Columbia.

"We have not included in these figures," the report says, "banking groups in which a commercial bank, a trust company and an investment house, and sometimes a savings bank, are tied together by some form of stock holdings and operated as complementary elements in an organization rendering complete financial services. We have held that such groups are similar to a departmentalized bank and different in the purposes and operations from a chain or group banking system.

"For purposes of the present report we define chain or group banks as systems in which centralized control, whether corporate or personal, and either rigid or informal, directs the operations of two or more complete banks, not functionally complementary, each working on its own capital and under its own personnel and located in one or more cities or states."

Commenting on the question whether the rapid development of chain banking was in the nature of a reaction against restrictions imposed on branch banking by the banking laws in many states the report says that observation does not wholly confirm this theory since chain banking is prevalent in some states where virtually no restriction is imposed on branch banking, as well as in those where the establishment of branch banks is prohibited. It adds:

The Question of Branch Banking

"However, the facts do show that anti-branch banking laws have been a factor in some cases, and probably in some sections, in the spread of chain banking. Instances have come to our attention where expansion along chain bank lines has been carried out by state banks whose expansion along branch bank lines was stopped by the passing of state laws prohibiting further branches. Yet whether expansion would have been along branch bank lines if the laws had imposed no barriers, it is impossible to say. There is obviously a well developed banking opinion in some sections that the chain bank method brings to outlying banks the strength and efficiency of a big organization without depriving them of their local individuality and sympathies. In view of the mixed factors noted, we feel it is unsafe to generalize as to what bearing branch banking laws have on chain developments.

"The recent era of rapid chain bank developments has found specific reflection in some state legislative action tending to restrict or control chain or group banking. Also we find a sharp difference of opinion among state bank commissioners who have expressed their sentiments regarding chain banking."

In a foreword to the report, issued in booklet form by the association at its New York City headquarters, Chairman Hecht says that "the Economic Policy Commission does not take a stand in advocacy of or in opposition to this new method of concentrating banking resources through the affiliation of banks into groups and chains, but is simply offering as a fact finding body what we believe is the first complete national picture of this rapidly growing movement."

SCHOOL SAVINGS GROW

A total of 4,222,935 school children participated in school savings banking in the United States during the last school year, depositing $28,672,[illegible] and rolling up net savings of $10,[illegible],928, bringing total bank balances now credited to this movement to above 50 million dollars, according to the annual report of the Savings Bank division of the American Bankers Association. Schools to the number of 15,597 are enrolled in the plan.

The Biggest Little Paper In Marshall County

HOLT WEEKLY NEWS

Issued Weekly From The Home Of The Biggest Co-operative Creamery In Marshall County

One Dollar Fifty Per Year In Advance

H. O. Hanson, Publisher. Holt, Marshall County, Minnesota; Friday, March 14, 1930. Volume 19; Number 46.

A Letter from Hjalmar Johnson

Editor of Holt Weekly News,
Holt, Minnesota.

Dear Editor:

There has been so much fussing, cussing, and discussing about the Price of Butter, but as there has been no change made that would help the situation, I have figured out a plan which I think will work fine with co-operation.

I suggest that the Farmers Co-Operative Creameries manufacture butter exclusively for the farmers' own use, and that not a pound should be sold.

Then if the high muckey-mucks would like a little butter, they should have the privilege of renting the cows from the farmers for a stipulated sum of, we'll say, $160.00 per cow a year, paid cash in advance. Then if the butter market was high thru the year, so the farmer would realize more from the product of his herd than he would from rentals he should have the privilege of returning the rent money and taking the product from his herd and selling it on the market.

If the butter market was low the farmer should have the privilege to buy every pound of butter that his herd produced at market price, then turn around and sell it to the renter for what ever price he would charge him when the renter has bought his yearly supply of butter.

The surplus should be fed to the hogs just before killing season. This would eliminate the danger of over-production and flooding the market which trends to force down pricet.

Yours for more co-operation and a higher market.

Now A-L-L T-O-G-E-T-H-E-R! Hep—hep—hep! Let's go!

Hjalmar Johnson,
Holt, Minn.

(Editor's Note:—Mr. Johnson's Plan should work all right by co-operating that way. If there is anyone else that has any solutions, substitutions, or dissolutions to make, I would be glad to hear from them.)

Basketball, 16-14

The Holt Basketball Team motored up to Greenbush last Friday evening for a battle with the noted cagers of that village. The local team has stood undefeated thru the past season and went north with the feeling of victory in their veins. Some of the local boosters who accompanied the team that night claimed that our boys are among the best in the basketball field.

The score was kind of close, but our boys managed to come out at the long end of a 16-14 score. This leaves our boys with a nice clean record for the 1929 season, not having lost a single game.

SHORT LESSONS IN DAIRYING
LESSON 92

PRODUCTION: The boys and the hired men will all be better workmen if they know how much butterfat the cows produce each month and how much they make in dollars. Keep records and make them a matter of news.

MANUFACTURING: Good butter begins with good cream, but unless all the equipment in the creamery is in the most sanitary condition, the cream may be lowered in quality. In the creamery, cream comes in contact with the vats, cream pump and pipes that carry the cream to the churn, and with the churn. It is surprising how quickly high quality cream can be affected unless all this equipment is thoroly clean and sterilized with boiling water or steam.

MARKETING: LandO'Lakes Creameries works to make the market price of butter a profitable one for the farmers through four different channels. First, thru high quality butter—people eat more butter when it is good. Second, thru the sale of good butter on as many markets as possible—LandO'Lakes butter is distributed from 80 of the leading cities of the United States instead of 3 cities as formerly. Third, thru advertising good butter. Fourth, thru legislation—tariff on butter, and is working for a tariff on vegetable oils from Philippine Is. from which oleomargarine is made.

School Notes

High School

Our janitor is now back on the job.

Ruth Olson is back to school this week.

The English II class has now completed the study of Julius Cæsar.

The Modern History class is now studying the World War, which proves rather interesting.

"Paying the Fiddler" is the H. S. play selected, and will be presented the latter part of April.

New officials were elected in the Dramatic Club, which were as follows:

Alice Hall	President
Johnnie Doran	Vice-President
Gerinda Monson	Sec. & Treas.

The Biology class has been working on Bacteria Culture Media. The dishes containing the bacteria food are observed for study from day to day.

The Chemistry class prepared Hydrofleuric acid on Tuesday. This gas has the peculiarity of decomposing glass. Glass plates were covered with paraffin, then names were carved in this, and then the gas was passed over it, leaving the carvings on the glass.

Seventh and Eighth Grades

The 8th grade boys are looking forward to baseball this spring.

The 7th grade is studying Minnesota. They are making booklets to cover its history and resources.

Fifth and Sixth Grades

We have started our W. C. T. U. project this week. The subject this year is, "We work for safety through sobriety." It promises to be very interesting.

The fifth grade Geography Class is now studying the outlying possessions of the United States.

We are all glad to hear that Alice Bottem is speedily recovering from an attack of pneumonia.

Third and Fourth Grades

The Third Grade was 100 miles ahead of the Fourth Grade in the Arithmetic race Monday.

The Fourth Grade are not satisfied with a Star car. They want an aeroplane so they can go faster.

Both grades are building a brick wall in a reading contest, the Third grade being represented by the Reds and the Fourth by the Blues.

The Third graders have new readers which stimulates their interest in this race.

The Third grade History class is working on Holland panels. They have completed the Holland scene for the sand table.

First and Second Grades

The narcissus bulbs, planted some time ago, have come up and are blooming.

In addition to the decoration of their room, they have made two health posters, and another called March Wind.

The second graders are very busy watching their percentage on the spelling chart steadily moving up.

The first and second graders have drawn tulips free hand for decoration on their blackboards and also have decorated their calendar with them.

W. W. Club to Meet

The members of the Ladies Club and their husbands will be entertained by Misses Ahlsten, Lanman, Rognlie, and Mrs. L. Anton, Saturday evening at the school house.

Knutson Files for County Attorney

Oscar R. Knutson, Warren attorney, opened the Marshall County 1930 political campaign last week when he filed for the office of county attorney.

Mr. Knutson has been engaged in the practice of law in Warren since the summer of 1927, being associated in his practice with Julius J. Olson, veteran Warren attorney.

State Democratic Covention To Be Held in April

A state convention of the Democratic party will be held in the Twin Cities in April, it was announced recently by Herbert H. D'Autremont, chairman of the state central committee.

The Executive Committee of the Minnesota Democratic State Central Committee has authorized and directed the state chairman to issue a call for a state convention. The action of the Committee was unanimous and it is expected that at the convention a full state and congressional ticket will be recommended for nomination at the primary election in June, and also a platform adopted.

The convention will undoubtedly be held in one of the Twin Cities the later part of April, the date to be announced later.

His Lucky Day

A lucky purchase was made by a man at a farm sale at Barnard castle, England. A after buying what was supposed to be a stone pig trough, he discovered on getting it home that it was a kirn of undoubted Roman origin, formerly used for the hand grinding of corn. It is probably fourteen hundred years old.

JESUS OF NAZARETH

Local people will have an opportunity to see the most recent filmization of the life of the Christ.

The picture is titled JESUS OF NAZARETH and will be presented here at the Holt Community Hall Monday, March 17th, at 8 p. m.

It is the story on which the foundation of our Christian civilization has been built. The story of God's gift to mankind, the story of Jesus the world's redeemer. It epitomizes the entire life of the master. As the theme is sacred it is therefore handled with the most delicate and most beautiful reverence. At the same time it contains many intense dramatic moments which keeps the audience spell bound. Its photography is the most beautiful you have ever seen. The art titles were painted by the well know Jean Vonover.

On the whole it is a production that nobody should fail to see.

Send us the news of your community.

Oscar Knutson of Humboldt spent Friday here with his folks.

Mrs. H. Peterson and Mrs. A. Hagen visited at the Hj. Johnson home Friday.

Willie Larson had the misfortune to cut off the thumb of his right hand while sawing wood on Tuesday.

Word was received here on Saturday from Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Gasper at Lesterville, S. D., that their infant son had died suddenly.

Mr. and Mrs. A. O. Thompson returned home on Monday from Halstad where they attended the funeral of Mr. Thompson's mother.

Ethel Johnson, Hilma and Agnes Nohre, Edgar Horien, and Kenneth Swan spent Sunday afternoon at the Leonard Larson home.

Maytag Announces A New Washer

At Newton, Iowa, the washer center of the world, the great Maytag factory, which dominates the commercial activities of the lively Iowa city is teeming with action. It has started on the most ambitious program in Maytag history, and the reason is a New Maytag washer.

Having originated the outstanding washer developments of many years, the announcement of a new washer by Maytag commands the interest of the entire washing machine industry and millions of housewives everywhere.

The New Maytag has a quiet, enclosed lifetime, oil-packed drive. This exceedingly quiet and smooth-running, self-oiled drive operates in a sealed housing. The gear is always in mesh so that there is no clashing when the washer is started or stopped. A new, handy auto-type shift lever is easily operated from any side of the washer.

The New Maytag has a thumb-screw brake on the caster wheel, non-breakable electric attachment plug and other outstanding scientific developments which add to its convenience and washing ability. The pride which The Maytag Company takes in its new product is fully justified.

The features of this new washer offer equally desirable advantages to city and farm homes. Homes without electricity may have the NEW Maytag equipped with an in-built gasoline Multi-Motor. This compact Maytag engine is now equipped with a new air cleaner.

All copy for correspondence and advertising should reach this office not later than Tuesday noon of the week intended for insertion to insure publication.

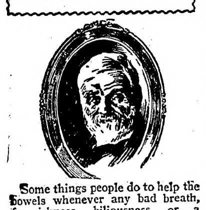
HAS THE LAXATIVE IN YOUR HOME A DOCTOR'S APPROVAL?



Some things people do to help the bowels whenever any bad breath, feverishness, biliousness, or a lack of appetite warn of constipation, really weaken these organs. Only a doctor knows what will cleanse the system without harm. That is why the laxative in your home should have the approval of a family doctor.

The wonderful product, known to millions as Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin is a family doctor's prescription for sluggish bowels. It never varies from the original prescription which Dr. Caldwell wrote thousands of times in many years of practice, and proved safe and reliable for men, women and children. It is made from herbs and other pure ingredients, so it is pleasant-tasting, and can form no habit. You can buy this popular laxative from all drugstores.

He was beginning to grow moody, plagued by a dread lest the Badger had succumbed to the winter's storms or been transferred to another station, and as they neared the American coast he consulted frequently with Tom and Cuffee, refurbishing his memory of Collishawe's cruising beat, deriving satisfaction from their matter-of-fact assurance of success.

The initial problem in trapping the Badger, as Fellowes saw it, was to toll her out of the blockading squadron, without exposing himself to one of the pinching maneuvers at which the Britishers were adepts. But sooner or later, he was sure, the Badger would beat the waters south of the Hook—that is, if she was still on the station. And south of the Hook he'd cast his lure.

Fellowes so contrived it that the brig sighted the highlands of Navesink an hour after sunrise of a clear, warm morning, but there were no signs of the Badger. Fretting and stewing, he ran southeast a day's sail, then lay to, and the next morning beat back against a contrary wind, plotting his course farther off-shore, on the chance that he might intercept the Badger returning from one of innumerable errands entrusted to Collishawe. But she was nowhere to seaward, and in the night he wore ship and loafed south, planning to repeat his first approach.

This time he succeeded. At noon the hail came from the lookout, perched precariously astride the fore royal yard:

"Sail ho! Mebbe a p'int to sta'b'd, sir."

Fellowes caught a glass from the binnacle rack, and ran for'ard, beckoning Cuffee to follow him up the ratlines to the foretop. Cuffee, staring across the eddying banks, made a little clucking sound with his tongue, tawny eyes agleam.

"Dat him Badger, mars'r."

"Sure of it?" Fellowes queried almost fearfully.

"S'pose yo' take him glass, yo' see."

Slowly, very slowly, Fellowes swept the sea to sta'b'd. Yes, there could be no mistake about that tops'l. Fellowes, himself, had helped to set it.

He trembled so violently that Cuffee steadied him on the confined platform of the top.

"Don' yo' fuss, mars'r," crooned the negro. "We goin' bust him Collishawe. Yah, him Big Sarpent goin' go blam-blam-blam! Dat de bes' Long Tom Cuffee ever see."

Half-ashamed, Fellowes smiled crookedly.

"I was afraid something had happened to him. Does he see us?"

"Oh, my aunt, dar him r' yal' drop! Him come plenty quick."

Fellowes hailed the deck.

"Wear ship! We'll stand off across his bows on the sta'b'd tack. Beat to quarters, Mr. Spencer. Cuffee, you might take a shot with the Long Tom."

Fellowes lingered in his lofty aerie while the drum thumped hysterically, and the stamping of sea boots beat an accompaniment. For'ard, almost at his feet, he could see the gleaming bulk of the Big Sarpent, swinging to la'b'd in response to the pressure of handspikes, Cuffee a figure of demoniacal energy, issuing instructions, adjusting the wad, shoving home the round shot with the last thrust of the rammer.

"Wha' him match? Gib him Cuffee. Yah, Big Sarpent, hiss yo' song!"

The brass throat of the gun clanged resonantly, and a jet of flame and smoke spat out in the Badger's direction. A rumble of cannon fire respond, muffled by the mist: the Badger's chase guns. And Fellowes listened for the whir of splash of shot, but the range was too great—probably too great for the twenty-four-pounder. Yet it was essential to give the sloop-of-war a mark to head for.

Fellowes hailed the sailing master, on the poop:

"Mr. Noggle! We must reduce speed. See if you and Chips can manage a drag to tow astern. In haste!"

"Aye, aye, sir," assented Noggle.

Leaping from the forechains to the deck, Fellowes stumbled against Cara Inglepin, balanced on an armchest to peer over the bulwarks.

"You have no business here, ma'am," he exclaimed. "We may be in action any moment."

"Is—it James?" she asked hesitantly.

He nodded.

"And you sail away from him?"

"I can't fight the Badger under the guns of the San Domingo and a razee and perhaps a couple of thirty-sixes."

"'Tis a lure, then?" she said. "He doesn't know you are stronger. He'll come after you—so bravely—and you—you will hammer him to pieces."

"If I can keep away from him," Fellowes answered grimly. "At close range 'twould be a different matter."

"Surely, sir, you have accomplished enough by this cruise?" she persisted. "And is it honorable to sacrifice other men's lives in a private quarrel?"

Fellowes flushed angrily.

"By your leave, Miss Inglepin! This is war. I fight my country's battles equally with my own. Captain Collishawe is more than my personal enemy."

"Oh, forget what I said," she cried, distressed. "Yet I meant well. 'Tis my fault that you have singled out James. Deny it not. Your ship was equipped to fight the Badger."

"Sure, ma'am." Again a complexity of passions tormented Fellowes. He wanted to be kind. He wanted to be cruel. He wanted to help. He wanted to hurt. The sweat stood in beads on his forehead, clammy as the sea mist that dripped from the spars. If he might take her in his arms, and comfort her! But no, cruelty would be more kind. "If I sink the Badger, I do a service for my country, which should be your country. If I happen to kill Captain Collishawe"—he made a pretense at a shrug—"why, I shall remove a dangerous enemy of my country—and the man who flogged me."

She regarded him with that small mournful look, her lips curved in pity.

"And I have done this to you!" she said. "I should remember. But each time it hurts the same. I am so sorry, so very sorry! I've turned love into hate, and ruined two men's lives. Ah, and brought my father to the gallows! Isn't that sufficient? Oh, well, then, we'll go below. Anywhere! What does it matter? A few hours, a few days, a few months!"

Her father led her away, mumbling fussily, and Fellowes hurried for'ard to inspect Noggle's drag—anything to occupy him, to aid him to forget her. She was in love with Collishawe, of course. The letter—everything—her words, her humors, her palpable anxiety—proved it. D—n the Britisher, he must have swept her off her feet! But when? Before—that night? Or after?

He turned to Cuffee, his brain working simultaneously along parallel lines, to caution the negro to reduce his powder charges when the brig lost headway.

"I don't want to reach him yet. No use in telling him we have a twenty-four-pounder. Just tickle him up, Cuffee. Keep him hot after us."

And Cuffee laughed uproariously.

"Yah, yah, yah, Mars'r Fellowe'! Dat big fun. Oh, we fool him Collishawe plenty too much."

Back on the poop straining anxiously through the mist, Fellowes recalled that last night on the True Bounty, a swish of skirts, a warm, pliant body pressed to his, the touch of soft lips.

CHAPTER XII

Battle

Long before evening the two vessels were visible to each other, the Centurion blocked clearly against the fading light in the east, the Badger a blurred tower of canvas in the radiance of the sunset.

The Badger gained slowly on the Centurion, and under cover of darkness the privateer cut herself free of the drag, shortening sail to maintain her position just out of range of Collishawe's twelve-pounders. The men off watch were sent to their hammocks, and those on duty bidden to lie down beside the guns. Fellowes, himself, endeavored to set an example by curbing his excitement, and toward midnight snatched a nap in one of the wardroom bunks.

An hour before sunrise Fellowes was awakened by a messenger from Breed, who had the watch. He came on deck to find the crew astir, the galley smoking busily. Cuffee was crooning over the Big Sarpent, removing yesterday's powder stains from its shiny barrel with a rag and polish.

Fellowes' first thought was to see to the feeding of his men. They were to have a hot meal and a special issue of grog. "And don't forget the prisoners, Mr. Breed. We may be hours at this job. Give them the same meal as the crew, and then stow them in the cabletiers." Himself, he attended O'Shaughnessy to the cockpit. Cara opened the door in response to his knock.

"I am loath to disturb you, ma'am," he said; "but the doctor will be requiring his quarters soon, and I'd place you out of reach of shot."

American "Penny Press"

The History of American Journalism states that the precursor of the penny press was the Daily Evening Transcript, established in Boston July 24, 1830, by Lynde M. Walter. While this paper was not sold on the streets for one penny, it was quoted at the extremely low rate of $4 per annum. Probably the first daily that was actually sold for one cent was the Cent of Philadelphia, published in the same year as the Daily Evening Transcript in Boston. In New York city the idea was first conceived by Dr. Horatio David Shepard.

Five-Eyed Insects

All insects, with few exceptions, have five eyes. Two of these are the compound eyes, which are situated one on each side of the head. The three remaining eyes are of the ordinary kind and are found on top of the head. These are usually clustered closely together in the form of a triangle. The compound eyes are for normal vision; the three simple eyes, being more light sensitive, are able to distinguish between light and darkness. This is very important, especially for the night flying insects.

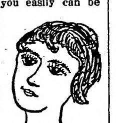
Analyzing ...YOU...

With the New Science of Syllabics

By C. J. COFFMAN
Dean of All the Enumerators

"Frances her name, and frank her face
Whatever be her lot,
When comes her fame, her highest place,
May sorrow find her not."

Frances



Frances' Frank Face.

You do not need to ever be a martyr, Frances, but you easily can be in helping you, in advising you or this life. I would suggest first that you do not too eagerly take offense when you find opinions differing from your own.

Rather assume the attitude that if your side is right it will be demonstrated without much crying out on your part. On the other hand, if the other side should be right, the least you say the less there will be to retract.

You have such a well-balanced face that I am sure you will see these things. Your picture indicates that.

Taking some of the old syllables from the days when language was based mostly on definite meanings. I find that part of your name means "to be joyful, to triumph."

I like to believe that this is what you are going to do, for you have the power.

Another syllable in your name, CES, indicates the ability to halt the actions of others. You have the power to do this in either one of two ways, by throwing discouragement in their pathway, or by helping them to see a better way, and thus moving them out of the wrong way.

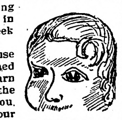
Such a laborer in the fields of right was Frances E. Willard, great humanist and temperance organizer.

On the male side of the lineage of your name (though not of your family) was St. Francis of Assisi Though his ideals seemed entirely impractical, though he did what the world called a foolish thing, he did accomplish a great good among his people, and organized a great work

The great things of this world, Frances, do not all belong to some one else. Some of them may belong to you. If you believe that, you will take them.

* * *

Fay



Childlike Forehead of Fay

Fay, the fairy-like. Your name rings a charm in itself and somehow defies us to find anything concerning it in the ancient Greek or Hebrew.

This is because the most learned of us never learn anything about the vast worlds of you, the fays of your fairyland.

For Fay really means fairy. You can, if you like, go skipping lightly over the waves of life, with your fluffy hair and flying ribbons, laughing at all our learnedness.

The childlike bulge in your forehead suggests precocity. And who shall say that the inquiring mind of the child shall find less wisdom than the sluggish mind of the sages?

Taking the letters in your name separately we find that F stands for both Fast and Furious. It suggests some of the faster movements in the fairy dance music, as composed by some of the great masters.

F provides the Fling and Flightiness of the Forgiveable little flashes of anger, followed by a kiss. Smiles through tears, that's the idea.

When we come to the A we think of the most useful word in all the language, "and." We place it here because it comes between the "f" and the "y," and it shall mean to us, Fairies and Youthfulness.

"Young and youthful," how often the world's most wise would claim those simple Y's.

How perennially the effervescence bursts forth in the work of Fay King, philosopher-cartoonist, beloved of the millions.

Old Language and Custom

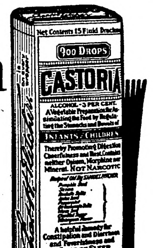
Manx, the Gaelic tongue of the Isle of Man, in which language a new edition of the prayer book was printed in the middle of last century, is now spoken by hardly more than 100 inhabitants of the island. The titles of the laws of the island's parliament of "House of Keys" are still read each year in English and Manx from the place called Tynwald.

Prolific Author

Alexander Dumas the elder, author of "The Count of Monte Cristo," is supposed to have been the most prolific writer who ever lived. He told Napoleon III that he had written some 1,200 volumes. One set of his works which purports to be "complete" contains 277 volumes.—Pathfinder Magazine.

Really Doesn't Pay

"A cheat," said Hi Ho, the sage of Chinatown, "may deceive others, but he must forfeit the respect of the one person whose esteem means most—himself."—Washington Star.



Children Cry for it

Children hate to take medicine as a rule, but every child loves the taste of Castoria. And this pure vegetable preparation is just as good as it tastes; just as bland and harmless as the recipe reads. (The wrapper tells you just what Castoria contains.)

When Baby's cry warns of colic, a few drops of Castoria has him soothed, asleep again in a jiffy. Nothing is more valuable in diarrhea. When coated tongue or bad breath tell of constipation, invoke its gentle aid to cleanse and regulate a child's bowels. In colds or children's diseases, use it to keep the system from clogging. Your doctor will tell you Castoria deserves a place in the family medicine cabinet until your child is grown. He knows it is safe for the tiniest baby; effective for a boy in his teens. With this special children's remedy handy, you need never risk giving a boy or girl medicine meant for grown-ups.

Castoria is sold in every drug store; the genuine always bears Chas. H. Fletcher's signature.

Thanks to Freud

"Modern morals, thanks to Freud and his followers among our popular novelists—modern morals are in a very unsettled state," Albert C. Lehman, founder of the famous Lehman prize for painters, said at a dinner in Pittsburgh. "We can't count on anything any more. We're here today, but where the deuce will we be tomorrow?

"A rich Pittsburgh banker said to his wife, a beautiful girl, once his stenographer:

"'Those are lovely orchids. Who gave them to you, darling?'

"'My next husband,' she answered. 'They are sweet, aren't they?'"

Drink Water to Help Wash Out Kidney Poison

If Your Back Hurts or Bladder Bothers You, Begin Taking Salts

When your kidneys hurt and your back feels sore don't get scared and proceed to load your stomach with a lot of drugs that excite the kidneys and irritate the entire urinary tract. Keep your kidneys clean like you keep your bowels clean, by flushing them with a mild, harmless salts which helps to remove the body's urinous waste and stimulates them to their normal activity. The function of the kidneys is to filter the blood. In 24 hours they strain from it 500 grains of acid and waste, so we can readily understand the vital importance of keeping the kidneys active.

Drink lots of good water—you can't drink too much; also get from any pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Salts; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast each morning for a few days and your kidneys may then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for years to help clean and stimulate clogged kidneys; also to neutralize the acids in the system so they are no longer a source of irritation, thus often relieving bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is inexpensive, cannot injure; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink, which everyone should take now and then to help keep their kidneys clean and active. Try this; also keep up the water drinking, and no doubt you will wonder what became of your kidney trouble and backache.

Irish Youth Movement Grows

The youth movement, which was started in Germany, is also making rapid strides in Ireland. In the last few weeks there has been an intensive effort to forward the health drive by establishing boy camps and boy scout centers. The idea has taken so well that it promises to become one of the largest educational campaigns ever held in that country.

You have got to be interested in something or somebody besides yourself to keep from being bored.

Ease in 5 Minutes—Comfort in 5 Hours

Don't neglect a COLD

DISTRESSING cold in chest or throat—that so often leads to something serious—generally responds to good old Musterole with the first application. Should be more effective if used once every hour for five hours.

Working like the trained hands of a masseur, this famous blend of oil of mustard, camphor, menthol and other helpful ingredients brings relief naturally. It penetrates and stimulates blood circulation, helps to draw out infection and pain. Used by millions for 20 years. Recommended by doctors and nurses.

Keep Musterole handy—jars and tubes.

To Mothers—Musterole is also made in milder form for babies and small children. Ask for Children's Musterole.

Killed for Playing Radio After Hours

Pottsville, Pa.—Playing his radio after 10:30 at night led to the killing of Peter Yurcheck of Primrose. Michael Sliss, who occupied half the double house, surrendered. Mr. and Mrs. Yurcheck and friends were dancing when Sliss pounded on the walls and demanded the music stop. A few minutes later Sliss appeared at the door with a gun and fired.

LOVE PILL SLAYER DECLINES PAROLE

Will Be Satisfied Only With Pardon.

Mansfield, Ohio.—For three years an unframed portrait of a sleek-haired, smiling girl has rested on a stand in one of the gloomy cells of the Ohio state reformatory here.

A gaudy yellow drape curtains the stand from the cell. An electric light shaded with blue paper continually glows over the picture. The stand is a shrine—a shrine to the memory of the love Emil "French" Balanescu, Cleveland's "love pill slayer," said he bore for Dorothy Kirk, the pretty sweetheart he was convicted of killing.

The likeness of Dorothy Kirk, victim of the love potion tragedy, haunts every waking and sleeping hour of her erstwhile lover as he goes about his duties in the prison.

It is the memory of his love that keeps "French" a prisoner in the reformatory, prison officials declare.

A year ago, "French" was brought before the reformatory board. He astonished the board by declaring that he did not wish to be paroled. He asked for a governor's pardon that the stigma of the slayer's brand might be removed. The request was denied.

"By accepting a parole I will admit that I was responsible for Dorothy's death," French said. "I know that I am innocent and would rather stay here 20 years before I gain my freedom by admitting that I killed the girl I loved, and still love."

Child Spanks Father; Jail Is His Reward

El Paso, Texas.—Revenge burning in his breast after each spanking his father gave him, Federico Guerrero, Juarez (Mexico) has claimed his attainment of manhood with a reversal of form.

"Papa, I whippa you now," said Federico. "Many times you make eet hard for me to sitta down when I was keed. I don't like that. You don' ever need whip me. I was good boy."

With those words the "child" who had bent over so many times to be on the receiving end of paternal advice picked up his father and spanked him.

The father whose strength had kept him master of his house for many years was surprised but not beaten. He stumbled out of the house down to the police department. Federico was jailed on a charge of assault.

Minnesota Bird League Feeds Game in Winter

Duluth, Minn.—The Douglas County Fish and Game league during the winter months patrols the roads of the county with sacks of grain, scattering food for the grouse and partridge.

"Feeding birds in the winter months is one of the more important means of bird propagation," Michael Teske, chairman of the executive committee, said. "We have quite a stock here and it is up to members of the league to co-operate and see that they remain."

Additional birds are obtained in the spring by the league and distributed along the streams and in woodlands of the county. Bird hunting in past years was one of the major sports here. Of recent years, however, the birds have become scarce.

Goettingen University Gets Mathematics Home

Goettingen, Germany. — The new home of the institute of mathematics of the University of Goettingen, the construction of which was made possible by a gift from the Rockefeller Foundation, was dedicated in December. Goettingen, widely known as the "mathematical center of the world," has thus acquired the most modern institute of the kind of all German universities.

Surplus of Women Growing in Portugal

Lisbon.—Portugal is a paradise for men, the surplus of women having increased steadily since 1890.

Forty years ago there were 139,051 more women in the country than men. Twenty years later this had been increased to 302,674. Today, the census figures show, 321,355 more women are living in Portugal than there are men. In Lisbon, the surplus is 38,616.

Vibrationless Street Cars Used in Tacoma

Tacoma, Wash. — New noiseless street cars have been in operation here. To free those new conveyances from rattle and jar rubber shock absorbers were used with a system of springs to offset the bumping of wheels over corner intersections. The rebuilt trolleys speed up to 30 miles an hour without the vibration or lurch of the old type street cars.

This Mother Had Problem

As a rule, milk is about the best food for children, but there are times when they are much better off without it. It should always be left off when children show by feverish, fretful or cross spells, by bad breath, coated tongue, sallow skin, indigestion, biliousness, etc., that their stomach and bowels are out of order.

In cases like this, California Fig Syrup never fails to work wonders, by the quick and gentle way it removes all the souring waste which is causing the trouble, regulates the stomach and bowels and gives these organs tone and strength so they continue to act normally of their own accord. Children love its rich, fruity flavor and it's purely vegetable and harmless, even for babies.

Millions of mothers have proved its merit and reliability in over 50 years of steadily increasing use. A Western mother, Mrs. May Snavely, Montrose, California, says: "My little girl, Edna's, tendency to constipation was a problem to me until I began giving her California Fig Syrup. It helped her right away and soon her stomach and bowels were acting perfectly. Since then I've never had to have any advice about her bowels. I have also used California Fig Syrup with my little boy, with equal success."

To be sure of getting the genuine, which physicians endorse, always ask for California Fig Syrup by the full name.

Seal Had Wandered Far

What is believed to be the first seal ever seen in Chesapeake bay has been shot and killed at Worton point, near Chestertown, Md. Benjamin Lively, who was returning from a duck hunting trip, saw a black head arise from the water not far from shore. The seal came 30 feet nearer land before Lively shot it with his duck-shooting gun. The seal, which was a male, measured 52 inches from nose to tail, and when dry was of a silver gray color.

Radio in Every Room

The Inferior Decorator

By H. LOUIS RAYBOLD

(Copyright.)

JANICE sealed the envelope containing her unqualified refusal of Bill's matrimonial offer and addressed it with an unfaltering hand. Fresh from a club meeting she was filled with an ambition that had for its goal something else than the job of being Bill Goodrich's wife.

"Peoples' homes will get all dolled up without your assistance," Bill had declared morosely the night before. "To think of a girl like you giving up marriage to decorate the houses of strangers!"

"Well—it's more than that!" Janice had responded stiffly. "It's—it's expressing myself as I could never do by cooking any man's pork chops, not even yours!"

Their evening had ended on a frigid note with the agreement that Janice was to consider his proposal for another twenty-four hours and then let him know her decision by writing.

And now, sealed and ready to go, lay the letter. Janice sprang to her feet, slipped into hat, coat and gloves, and was on her way to mail it.

Nothing now to prevent the investment of a portion of the small legacy from an aunt in the rent of an office on the fourth floor of the Spencer building, her name in neat black letters on the door's glass paneling. "J. V. Henry, Interior Decorator."

Clients proved sparse, although Janice combed the local Who's Who lists and sent out large white cards engraved with the information that Miss J. V. Henry, graduate of Platt's Art school, was at their disposal for beautification of their homes.

Then one morning when Janice was despondently wondering why she had imagined there was any market for the sort of thing she could do, a plumply pretty young woman came into the office bursting with importance.

"My fiance is away on a business trip and has left the finishing up of our new bungalow entirely to me. He's a very particular person and I am very anxious to have him pleased on his return."

"Hm," murmured Janice thoughtfully. "It's hard to cater to the taste of some one you do not know, but we'll do our utmost. Now if you'll just tell me something of the general scheme of things."

In the days which followed, Janice spent every waking thought on the job. Apparently, expense did not have to be considered and, unhampered by this handicap, Janice was able to satisfy her innate sense of what was correct. Bit by bit, the rooms were completed from the carefully placed side lights to the lovely cretonned wicker furniture on the sun porch. Coincident with its finishing came a telegram from the man who was to foot the bills saying that he was on his way home.

Janice drove out in her little roadster shortly after sunset for a final glimpse of the results of her labors. As she slipped in through a side door she was startled to hear sobs mingled with masculine tones.

"Don't cry, Sweetie. 'Tisn't your fault. It's the darn interior decorator. Inferior decorator, I call her. Why, a man couldn't put his feet on a single chair in the place and make himself to home! And listen, dearie, what we want is a nice overhead chandelier. Not these little dinguses stuck around in the walls. When I want light, I want light! Let's sell this arty little shack and buy a regular little home, Hon."

Janice got out without a sound and drove furiously for a mile or two. Then she slowed down and stopped. Fumbled for her handkerchief and wept into its inadequate depths. The darling, darling little house! That horrible, horrible man!

Suddenly, she smiled a little. Thank heaven, he was not going to keep it. Never would his feet desecrate her lovely Windsor chairs, the dear little rush seat rocker.

Yet somebody just as unappreciative would probably purchase it. If only—

A remarkable idea popped into her mind. Just suppose she made another dent in the legacy and made a down payment on the little house?

Now Bill Goodrich had kept strictly away from Janice ever since the coming of her letter. Therefore he was startled when, on lifting the telephone receiver from its hook, he heard the voice of Janice over the wire. He listened. Then, "Let me get this straight," he said. "You want me to act as purchasing agent for you in regard to a little house whose owner you don't like and can't bear to think of his putting his feet—I say, Janice, let me come up to the house and hear about it."

Twenty minutes later he was acquainted with all the details.

"I put my very soul into that house," she ended.

"Would you let me buy it instead of you, Janice?"

"You?"

Bill nodded. "Want to get married."

"M—married?"

"Uh-huh." Something he saw in Janice's face encouraged him to add, "To you, dear."

And suddenly Janice knew that she loved Bill and this is how she knew. Because she realized that she could bear the thought of a pair of feet on the dear little rush seat rocker, providing they were his!

For COLDS

We all catch colds and they can make us miserable; but yours needn't last long if you will do this: Take two or three tablets of Bayer Aspirin just as soon as possible after a cold starts. Stay in the house if you can—keep warm. Repeat with another tablet or two of Bayer Aspirin every three or four hours, if those symptoms of cold persist. Take a good laxative when you retire, and keep bowels open. If throat is sore, dissolve three tablets in a quarter-glassful of water and gargle. This soothes inflammation and reduces infection. There is nothing like Bayer Aspirin for a cold, or sore throat. And it relieves aches and pains almost instantly. The genuine tablets, marked Bayer, are absolutely harmless to the heart.

Fliers Say Courage Varies with the Way they Feel

AEROPLANE pilots tell us that their courage, their whole attitude toward flying, varies from day to day, with the way they feel. If they feel full of pep, healthy, they can try anything—nothing frightens them. Their nerve is unshaken; their skill keen; their flying is machine-like in its perfection.

It is an entirely different story, however, if they wake up in the morning feeling sick, down in the mouth. Then flying becomes a real danger.

This is the lesson we can learn from airmen. It is the lesson that points to Nujol—the simple, natural, normal way—without the use of drugs or medicines to keep the body internally clean of the poisons that slow it up. Nujol is pure, tasteless, colorless as clear water. It forms no habit; it cannot hurt even a baby.

See how the sunshine floods into your life when you are really well. Get a bottle of Nujol in its sealed package at any drug store. It costs only a few cents and it makes you feel like a million dollars. Find out for yourself what Nujol will do for you this very night. You can be at top-notch efficiency and happy all the time. Get a bottle today.

What is the matter with these brave people when they are not up to par? The natural poisons in their bodies have not been swept away. They are allowing their brains to be clouded and dulled by poisons which should not be permitted to remain in the body.

Sam Reierson is Appointed Grygla Creamery Operator

H. M. Magneson, operator of the Grygla Co-operative Creamery, presented his resignation to take effect April 1, at a meeting of the board of directors last week.

Sam Reierson, operator atKarlstad, was appointed to take his place. This will be a promotion for Mr. Reierson, since theGrygla creamery is larger than the one at Karlstad.—T. R. F. Times.

L. Schafer is Appointed Assistant Buttermaker

The local creamery board met in regular monthly session on Monday to attend to their business matters and to consider the hiring of an assistant buttermaker at the creamery here.

Several applicants attended the meeting while many sent in their applications. The board hired L. Schafer of Leonard who has experience as a creamery man. Mr. Schafer and family will move here next week.

Klungness-Knutson

Constance Klungness, daughter of Jacob Klungness, farmer, at Silver Creek and Knut Knutson of Thief River Falls, were united in marriage at the Lutheran parsonage here on Sunday evening, Rev. Redal officiated.

The newlyweds left at once for Canada where they will make their home this summer.

Nels M. Engen, County Supt. of schools was here on Tuesday and met with the local school board at a special meeting.

Muskrat Season Is Opened

George W. McCullough, Commissioner of Game and Fish in the state of Minnesota, has issued the following order prescribing the muskrat season for the year 1930.

Muskrats may be taken in any county in the state in the manner and under the conditions prescribed by law, during the period commencing at 12 o'clock noon on March 20, 1930, and continuing to and closing at noon on April 15, 1930.

No person is allowed to set or use more than fifty traps for muskrats at any one time. No person shall set, visit or remove any trap for muskrats between the hours of eight p. m. and six a. m., which means that traps may be left in houses or other places over night.

Openings made in muskrat houses for the purpose of inserting or removing traps shall be sealed. Traps shall not be placed under the ice near the muskrat houses, or in runways or chanel used by muskrats.

The shooting or spearing of muskrats is prohibited.

Mrs. Einar Loven spent Saturday afternoon at Middle River.

Theo. Ness made a business trip to Warren on Saturday.

Dr. L. R. Twete of Thief River spent all day Wednesday here attending to professional calls at several different farms.

Rev. Redal took the Rustad family over to Warren on Wednesday to visit Mr. Rustad who is at a hospital there.

Several of the young folks of this community gathered at the Westdin home Friday evening to help Ardelle Westdin celebrate her birthday. The evening was spent at dancing.

Several people from here took in the districts basketball tournament at Thief River Falls last week. Thief River came out the winner in the tournament, with Warren holding second place.

Farmers to Move Here

According to Pete Sorter several farmers from Ottertailcounty have rented farms in around Ringbo and will here this spring.

We are glad to hear this and, bid more of them welcome here.

Shakespeare Stuff

School Notes

High School

The English II students have now completed the study of "The Rime of the Ancient Mariner."

The English III class is now reading Emerson's Essays. At present they are studying the essay on Friendship.

Thru the courtesy of the U. S. Steel Corporation and the Victor Animatograph Company of Davenport, Iowa, the chemistry class have been studying the method by which steel is produced from ore mined in northern Minnesota. A complete set of lantern slides, with lecture, was furnished. The science laboratory was used for the show room. We learned that three fifths of the iron used in the United States is being mined in Minnesota.

The High School Auditorium was the scene of a very enjoyable and social gathering on Saturday evening, March 15. Misses Ahlsten, Lanman, Rognlie, Torblaa, and Mrs. Anton were the hostesses.

The general science class is using the International Code for experiments in communication, both for telegraph and wireless.

THE SLACKER

The slacker is the one who spends his time just loafing and sometimes does not even spend his time in reading books, magazines or newspapers.

He will always try to "get by" without preparing his lessons in school. He also tries to prevent small extra duties in the home and at school, from being assigned to him.

The slacker stands a small chance of passing the yearly examinations at the end of the school year. His marks, having been mostly below passing during the year, will likely be below passing in the yearly examination.

The slacker is the person who never gets anywhere in life. It takes him a long time to finish his education, if he ever finishes. He will not be able to get anywhere in business either, because of slacking. If he does get work it will be a "low-pay" job and he is not very apt to get a promotion.

As a conclusion, I would like to say to all, especially school children, "Don't be a slacker. It does not pay. It never has paid to be a slacker and I don't think it ever will. Do you?"

Eleanor B. Larson, Freshman.

Seventh and Eighth Grades

The two grades discussed St. Patrick's Day on Friday, with the idea in the beginning that he was Irish, but found out that he was Scotch. He is important because he brought Christianity into Ireland. He died on March seventeenth and that is why people celebrate on that day. One student even remarked he wouldn't mind celebrating the death of more Irishmen.

The eighth grade pupils are studying the Constitution of the United States.

The seventh grade pupils are making outlines for the oral book reports they are having this week.

Fifth and Sixth Grades

The fifth grade pupils organized a Round Table last Friday. The purpose of the club is the club is to foster outside reading activities.

Eleanor Peterson was elected president. Each Friday a short program is given by the group.

As a summary of the study of Asia the sixth grade pupils have arranged a museum table. Curios and products from each country in Asia are found on the table.

Third and Fourth Grades

Last Friday the Third and Fourth graders tied in their Arithmetic race.

There are three new members of the Reading Club: Evelyn Larson, Frances Westdin, Doris Larson.

The Third and Fourth Grade girls are painting vases; the boys ark making bird houses for Industrial Arts.

In "My Weekly Reader Record" contest the third graders have added one red brick to their wall.

MY HERO

Lindberg flew over the ocean blue.
Neve the taste of beer he knew.
Then let us not forget
He never smoked a cigarette,
That's why his hand was steady,
And his mind was clear,
And never had he a thought of fear.

I want to be like Lindberg,
Just as brave and true.
I may not cross the ocean
But there are other things to do.
If I am honest and brave and true,
I may be a hero too.

—Omar Hanson, 9 years old,
Third Grade.

First and Second Grades

This poem was composed by the second graders.

MARCH WIND

March wind melts the snow.
We like to see it go,
It tries to make you take your coat off.
The wind is nice and makes you laugh
March wind flies our kites for us,
We must be good and do not fuss,
March wind makes the pussy willows bloom.
We have some right here in our room.

The spelling of the second graders has greatly improved, as the percentage this week is already near the top.

Milton Hanson brought to school a stock rose and a carnation last week.

The second graders are learning the capital letter in all its forms.

Attended Financial Meeting

Rev. L. M. Redal, O. H. Nohre. C. H. Gunheim and H. O. Hansson attended a meeting of the finance committee of the Thief River circuit of the Lutheran churches at Thief River Falls on Tuesday.

Walter Larson, who has been assistant buttermaker here for over two years, has been hired as manager of the Farmers' Creamery at Bronson. He will move there and take charge April 1st.

The State Highway Dept. has taken down all the signs on the new highway from here toGreen bush and discontinued using it. They have smoothened the old road up for spring traffic and are using it now.

IverLarson had the misfortune to pinch off one of the fingers on his left hand last week while replacing the motor in a car he was overhauling.

Filed For Governor

To be born in a Minnesota home a half centuary ago, to have been married in the same home, to have been the father of two daughters born in the same home—and to have lived there continuously for this period, is perhaps not entirely an unusual experience—but it shows a devotion to one's state and home surroundings which, to say the least, is quite delightful.

Such is the history of Ray P. Chase, who has just announced his candidacy for the nomination of Governor of Minnesota, as a Republican. Mr. Chase comes of pioneer Minnesota and New England stock. Born at Anoka in 1880, the son of the late Chas. E. Chase and Lena Giddings Chase, he has been a real Minnesotan during the years he has lived.

Carl Gutrud Injures Hand

While sawing lumber on their farm southeast of here one day last week Carl Gutrud met with a very painful injury when he sawed his right hand to pieces. He lost all but one half of one finger and the whole palm of his hand. He is at a hospital in Thief River Falls.

Hans Wahlin, manager of the local creamery, and Louis Wegge, president of the board of directors, attended the Land O'Lakes Creameries annual meeting last week.

Auction Sale Monday

Markus Udstrand, pioneer farmer in this community, will have an auction sale onMonday, March 24th on the Andrew Bjerk farm. He is selling all his personal consisting on several head of horses about 25 head of cattle, farm machinery and household goods. O. C. Brenna is the auctioneer and Marshall County State Bank clerk.

Read the auction ad. on the back page of this issue.

Moved Back To Holt

Mr. and Mrs. Ludvig Sagstuen and family moved back to our community here last week. They have been makiug their home on a farm near Viking the past two years.

Mr. Sagstuen has rented the old Norbeck place in Mud Lake and will farm there with a lot of stock and sheep which they have moved out there.

While driving some of their cattle here on the highway, they had the misfortune of having one of their cows killed about two miles south of town, when a speeding car ran into their herd.

The News joins their friends here in bidding them welcome back to our community.

Holt Township Election

Following are the officers who were elected at the Holt Township election held March 11:

For Superviser, Carl Lindholm Town Clerck, T. B. Felden; Justice of the Peace for 2 year, Ole Davidson; Justice of the Peace, G. P. Sorter; Constables, George Gura and Elmer Engstrom.

H. O. Hanson and the Rustad family made a trip to Warren on Monday.

A. W. Peterson and family of Middle River spent Sunday at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Einar Loven.

YOU HAVE A DOCTOR'S WORD FOR THIS LAXATIVE

In 1875, an earnest young man began to practice medicine. As a family doctor, he saw the harm in harsh purgatives for constipation and began to search for something harmless to the sensitive bowels.

Out of his experience was born a famous prescription. He wrote it thousands of times. It proved an ideal laxative for old and young. As people saw how marvelously the most sluggish bowels are started and bad breath, headaches, feverishness, nausea, gas, poor appetite, and such disorders, are relieved by the prescription, it became necessary to put it up ready for use. Today, Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, as it is called, is the world's most popular laxative. It never varies from Dr. Caldwell's original effective and harmless formula. All drugstores have it.

She regarded him with the same pitying expression which had irked him the day before.

"Thank you," she answered quietly, "but if we may, sir, we'll stay here. Doctor O'Shaughnessy will require assistance."

"But you don't realize! Round-shot wounds are hideous. And grape!"

"I'd rather see the worst things than crouch below and imagine them. And I'm not one to faint and stew, Captain Fellowes."

"There's Mr. Inglepin," Fellowes suggested, "and your attendant?"

"I may be a fool," Ben Inglepin retorted tartly, "but I can wind a bandage or hold a basin—and I prefer anything to the darkness and stench of the orlop, which, I suppose, is where you'd put us."

"'Tis safe, at least," asserted Fellowes, puzzled.

"Why, sir, if we must believe you, we are by no means safe, wherever we are."

Fellowes looked at the duenna, dark, fat, immutable, jetty eyes squinting from the folds of her mantilla.

Cara said quickly:

"The senora can help, too. She will be much better for having something to do. Come, sir, do not sentence us to the hold! Your wounded will be more comfortable for what assistance we can render." She appealed to O'Shaughnessy. "You'll confirm me, won't you, doctor?"

The Irishman supported her gallantly.

"'Tis short-handed we are, captain, and with none but the stewards for dressers I'll be in a bad way."

It was a good argument, Fellowes admitted to himself. He owed his men every chance for life, and three extra helpers might turn the scale for the poor devils, whose bodies were maimed by the Badger's carronades.

"Very well," he agreed, "if you are certain 'twill not distress you. Once we are in action, you must remain here."

"You speak of being in action, Captain," the girl exclaimed. "How soon—will it be?"

"Within the hour," he answered curtly, and withdrew.

Ascending to the deck, he rehearsed in his memory the fearful expectation mirrored in her face. She knew what he planned for Collishawe, and dreaded it. Well, he'd give her ample to weep over. When he'd finished with the Englishman—

The Centurion, at Fellowes' direction, wore handsomely, and stood nor'-east-by-nor' on the la'b'd tack. The Badger, apprehending the maneuver indicated the Yankee brig intended to come to close quarters, commenced to take in her mains'l and clew up her after canvas.

Fellowes studied their progress, as the interval of blue water diminished with the persistent attempt of the Badger to point up higher than the Centurion, and when he thought the range was right for the twenty-four-pounder he hailed Cuffee!

"Ahoy, gunner! We'll try the Long Tom."

Cuffee's first shot skipped the waves in front of the sloop-of-war's bow. The next ricocheted over the enemy, but the third was a clean hit for'ard of amidships, and the Centurion's company raised a lusty cheer. Collishawe, undaunted, yawed to bring his chasers to bear, the twelve-pounder shot splashing up the water perhaps a quarter of a mile short of the target.

Cuffee fired a fourth time, and scored a hit in the waist.

"Come, come, lad, 'tis a spar I want," Fellowes called impatiently.

The next shot was an over, clean betwixt main and mizzenmasts, and Collishawe, apparently appreciating the weight of metal against him, came about once more, and stood down before the wind, bow-on, in an effort to close, so that his heavy broadside batteries could come into play. But Fellowes was alert.

"Steady all," the order came from the speaking trumpet. "Rake him, Cuffee. Mr. Spencer, hold your fire until I bid you loose."

Working with frenzied speed, Cuffee had the Long Tom loaded and fired almost before Fellowes had finished speaking. The shot struck the Badger on a level with the cat-heads. A second shot drilled the hull under the sta'b'd fore-chains, tossings a shower of splinters in air.

"Now, then, Mr. Spencer," Fellowes hailed the first lieutenant.

And the la'b'd twelve-pounders roared as one. All but two or three missed, but Fellowes was sure one shot had whistled through the forestays and a second hit the hull. He was satisfied.

"We'll go about, Mr. Noggle," he bade the sailing master. "On the sta'b'd tack."

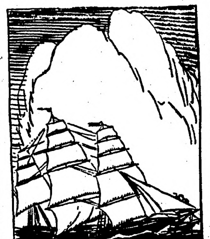
It was time. As the Centurion wore, the Badger's chase guns flung their shot into the privateer's bulwarks with telling effect. When the confusion had abated Fellowes saw one man dead on his deck, and two others wounded. The Badger had teeth, and knew how to use them.

"Carry those men below," he ordered. "Bosun, where are your sand buckets?"

The Badger pegged away with her chasers, but the Centurion ran out of range quite easily and wore ship to give the Long Tom another chance. And an exultant yell greeted Cuffee's next performance—the main topmast of the slop-of-war tumbled slowly from the fidds in a sprawling litter of spars and canvas. Momentarily helpless, the Badger flapped up into the wind, and Fellowes swooped nearer for the benefit of his twelve-pounders. The broadsides roared as fast as the gun crews could swab, load and fire.

But Collishawe was a seaman. Before the privateer could smash another stick, he had the wreckage cleared from his deck, and the Badger manageable—and Fellowes must sheer off to avoid those hard-battering carronades that would rend the brig to matchwood at close quarters.

A half-dozen more shots from the Long Tom, and the Badger's foremast, probably weakened by the hit in the chains, went overside in a clutter that dragged the sloop-of-war down by the head. Fellowes stood on, making use of the predicament to gain a position astern of her, but by some incredible effort, Collishawe was able to run both his long twelves aft, and in the face of a scorching fire from the Centurion's sta'b'd battery, actually succeeded in shooting away the brig's fore-topmast, blanketing the Big Sarpent, killing one of Cuffee's gun crew and drowning a pair of Sopher's marines.



The Centurion Wore Handsomely.

Fellowes, coolly determined to take no unnecessary risks, promptly retired out of range, cleared the wreckage from his fo'c's'le, and again ordered Cuffee to resume sharp shooting. The negro had warmed to his work, and the Long Tom hurled its shot into the crippled sloop-of-war with appalling regularity.

Fellowes called to Cuffee: "Take your time, gunner; but I want you to knock over another stick."

Cuffee's response was a clean hit in the Badger's mizzenmast, which broke midway to the top, and swamped the whole waist with its debris. The sloop-of-war broached to, all but helpless, while the Centurion headed across her bows, broadside batteries flaming as she tacked back and forth, back and forth, the Long Tom adding its resonant voice to the sharper detonations of the twelve-pounders. The smoke was banked so densely around the privateer that the enemy was practically invisable; but an answering broadside roared from the sloop-of-war, and the Centurion quivered under the impact of the carronades' eighteen-pounder shot.

"Sta'b'd your helm, Mr. Noggle," hailed Fellowes. "He's swung his head around."

Probable Age of Earth

The Naval observatory says that it is believed that the solar system has existed in approximately its present form for many millions of years; but from our present knowledge on this subject we cannot state what may have been its condition at any definite period in the remote past, such as 500,000,000 years ago. A recent estimate, found in "Astronomy," by Russell, Dugan and Stewart, gives the earth's age as possibly some four or five billion years, but this is subject to future revision if other factors in the problem become known. It is supposed that the day was formerly somewhat shorter, and the moon somewhat nearer the earth than at present.

Meerschaum

The chief known deposits of meerschaum in the United States are in Grant county, New Mexico. Meerschaum taken from these deposits, says the Geological survey, is very similar in appearance to that obtained from the famous deposits in Asia Minor as it appears on the market ready for carving. The Asia Minor product, however, is somewhat lighter and more spongy.

Cargo Sailors Dislike

Many common cargoes have some curious and unpleasant characteristics. Sugar, for instance, gives off a powerful and often poisonous gas. It has also a sickening odor, and you cannot get the sweet taste out of your mouth. The men simply crave vinegar or lemon juice—anything sour. "Deliver us from sugar" is the sailor's earnest prayer.

Lonely Hearts

WILBERT has a heart of gold. Will no one tell him what's the matter—why girls turn pale, and gracious matrons freeze at his approach? Yes, we will. This has gone far enough. Get a new pipe, Wilbert, and break it in gently, thoughtfully, with Sir Walter Raleigh's favorite smoking mixture. When the curling wisps of its fragrance surround you, everything will be changed, Wilbert.

How to Take Care of Your Pipe

(Hint No. 3) To make your pipe sweet from top to heel, smoke all the pipe load when you break it in, or fill the bowl half full the first few times so that the heel, and not merely the top, will be broken in. PEPER'S TRUE SMOKE

This is the English translation of the Norwegian advertisement which appeared in the week before last issue of this paper.

All Was Going Well Until Dog Butted In

Damariscotta, Maine.—A well known and very much-liked family of summer residents have had some nice rooms finished off above their garage as a sort of overflow accommodation for their numerous guests.

Recently there appeared a kitten in the chamber window. Investigation showed that the "kitten" was not of the genus felis, but one that carries its tail over its back.

How to get the kitty down was a problem, but was being solved by bits of meat carefully laid on the stairs. The kitty was almost down stairs picking up mouthfuls as it came when the family dog appeared.

He doesn't like cats of any genus and went into action immediately. The rooms were not available for the guests and the dog has been a rank outsider ever since.

ROBBER PURLOINS CAR FOR ESCAPE

Works Daring Ruse and Gets Away With Loot.

Los Angeles.—Within a few minutes after he had stolen an automobile by a unique method, a bandit held up the West Side State bank and escaped in the car with $600 in currency.

The bandit made his first appearance at the Claire Brothers automobile salesrooms.

"I'd like to buy a car," he said.

"Certainly," said a salesman: "we have just what you want."

"Well," added the bandit, "I'd like to see how it runs first."

"That can easily be arranged."

And the salesman, George Peape, proceeded to drive the bandit out in a second-hand car for demonstration. In front of 2030 Palm Grove drive the bandit asked Peape to stop.

"My wife and I live in this house," he said, according to Peape, "and I'd like to surprise her. I'll sit at the wheel and you go ring the door bell."

As Peape was about to press the button he looked around in time to see his pseudo-customer driving off.

A few minutes later A. R. Collins, assistant manager of the bank, was looking into the muzzle of a revolver held menacingly by the bandit.

"All the dough in sight and no funny business," the latter gruffly commanded. He pocketed the currency shoved forward by Collins, backed out of the bank and stepped into his purloined automobile.

Wizard Chases Witch; Germans Scent Fraud

Berlin.—The year 1930, too, is to have its witch trial. The case is being heard in a Mecklenburg court.

The witch operated for some time in a little Mecklenburg village on the Baltic sea. All sorts of hard luck hit the hamlet and the countryside around about.

The curse was especially virulent among the bovine population, a proper characteristic in any good household of a witch curse. Numerous cows died for no discoverable reason—discoverable to the peasant owners, at least. The only explanation was the presence of a certain strange, sinister woman in their midst who had always been suspected of occult skullduggery, anyway.

So the more aggressive of the peasants took counsel together and engaged the services of a widely-known hexenmeister—wizard—to drive out the witch. His counter curse was so terrifying that the expectant peasants scattered in great fright thereat, not waiting to see whether the witch would flee. But she did flee, with satisfactory precipitateness before the withering exorcism, as the peasants learned later.

So they were pleased—until some head a little sharper and less medieval than the rest discovered evidence that the wizard and the witch, instead of being enemies engaged in a deadly occult feud, had really been in cahoots all the time. That the sinister witch, in fact, had from the beginning been paid by the wizard to play the part.

Hence the present trial. Calling it a witch trial is perhaps a bit strong. It is really just a commonplace case of fraud.

Post-Hole Pools Save Village From Flames

Washington, N. J.—The village of Broadway, N. J., near here, was saved from disaster when sufficient water was collected from holes, dug recently for the erection of a telephone line, to extinguish a fire.

A blaze which destroyed the barn of Arthur W. Read, a contractor, threatened to spread to nearby buildings and firemen were helpless on learning that Pohatcong creek, the only source of water, was frozen over. Then some one remembered the holes which the American Telephone and Telegraph company had just dug and soon the fire was extinguished with the water which had filled these excavations.

Jonesboro, Ark.—Picking persimmons, Charles McDaniel, Jr., ten, was chased up a tree by bulldogs. The limb broke and the boy suffered a double fracture of the left arm.

Acidity

The common cause of digestive difficulties is excess acid. Soda cannot alter this condition, and it burns the stomach. Something that will neutralize the acidity is the sensible thing to take. That is why physicians tell the public to use Phillips Milk of Magnesia.

One spoonful of this delightful preparation can neutralize many times its volume in acid. It acts instantly; relief is quick, and very apparent. All gas is dispelled; all sourness is soon gone; the whole system is sweetened. Do try this perfect anti-acid, and remember it is just as good for children, too, and pleasant for them to take.

Any drug store has the genuine, prescriptional product.

Busy Grandpa

We do not know a man among our acquaintances who actually does twice as much work as his grandfather did despite the modern time saving facilities.—American Magazine.

Denver Mother Tells Story

Nature controls all the functions of our digestive organs except one. We have control over that, and it's the function that causes the most trouble.

See that your children form regular bowel habits, and at the first sign of bad breath, coated tongue, biliousness or constipation, give them a little California Fig Syrup. It regulates the bowels and stomach and gives these organs tone and strength so they continue to act as Nature intends them to. It helps build up and strengthen pale, listless, underweight children. Children love its rich, fruity taste and it's purely vegetable, so you can give it as often as your child's appetite lags or he seems feverish, cross or fretful.

Leading physicians have endorsed it for 50 years, and its overwhelming sales record of over four million bottles a year shows how mothers depend on it. A Western mother, Mrs. R. W. Stewart, 4112 Raritan St., Denver, Colorado, says: "Raymond was terribly pulled down by constipation. He got weak, fretful and cross, had no appetite or energy and food seemed to sour in his stomach. California Fig Syrup had him romping and playing again in just a few days, and soon he was back to normal weight, looking better than he had looked in months."

Protect your child from imitations of California Fig Syrup. The mark of the genuine is the word "California" on the carton.

PRAISE LASHINGS FOR LOVE CRIMES

French Press Approve That Form of Punishment.

Paris.—The French press hailed as an admirable solution to prevalent "love crimes" the recent lashing in Temesvar, Rumania, of a woman sentenced to six years of forced labor for having killed her rival.

Madame Borugsch, convicted of having murdered Mlle. Anna Lowinal last October, was given 60 blows of the lash on her naked back a few days ago. Various newspapers of central Europe voiced an indignant protest that a woman should be so badly flogged that her back resembled raw beefsteak after the ordeal.

Not so the Paris journals; echoing the satisfaction manifested by the Temeshwar Hirlap at the added punishment inflicted on the murderess, Parisian editors are pointing out the excellence of this phase of Rumanian criminal procedure.

Despite the spectacle of a woman's back being slowly beaten into a bloody pulp, French critics are inclined to attach more importance to another angle of the affair. They find exceedingly significant the statement by the Temeshwar Hirlap that since the flogging law went into effect the so-called love crimes have almost been exterminated in Rumania. Such crimes committed by women numbered 164 in 1920; this formidable figure was reduced to 38 in 1922, to 26 in 1923, to 22 in 1924, and dropped to 8 last year, thanks to the rigid application of the law of the knout.

Madame Dora Borugsch has had her back pounded into a jelly, say the French journalists and the Temeshwar Hirlap, but 156 persons who would normally be rotting in the cemeteries are now sleeping tranquilly in their beds. The Temeshwar Hirlap looks favorably on the result, and so does the French press.

Enough of sloppy sentimentality, say the French; "love crimes" are committed not for love or love despised but by assassins enraged by the poison of self-love. Who will then have the courage, demands one Parisian editor, to propose in the chamber of deputies a similar law designed to save 156 lives?

Alabama Man of 110 Defies Centenarians

Birmingham, Ala.—Lonnie Boutwell, one hundred and ten years old, who lives near Dublin, Ala., is challenging all the neighboring communities to bring out their centenarians and let him tell them a thing or two that happened before they were born.

Boutwell was born in August, 1818, a year before Alabama was admitted into the Union as a state. He can tell of events which took place more than 100 years ago, and is an interesting conversationalist. He was born in South Carolina, but his parents moved to Alabama when he was an infant, driving all the way in an ox wagon. He lives with his son, Isaac Boutwell.

Boutwell is the father of eight children, six still alive. Those living are Mrs. V. S. Rowells, seventy-three, of Greenville, Ala.; W. B. Boutwell, sixty-nine, of Selma, Ala.; Isaac Boutwell, sixty-seven, of Dublin, Ala.; Henry Boutwell, sixty, of Farmersville, Ala.; Mrs. Clarissa Johnson, fifty-five, of Pritchett, Texas, and Mrs. P. H. Philpot, eighty, of Gladwater, Texas.

Boutwell farmed until the Civil war, when he enlisted in Company M, Sixth Alabama regiment, and served under Gen. Stonewall Jackson.

He recalls seeing Jackson, when the general was shot by one of his own men, throw up his hand with his cap in it and say, "Boy, you wounded me badly." During his service in the war Boutwell received a wound in the thigh from which he never fully recovered.

After the war, Boutwell returned to Alabama and resumed farming. His wife died five years ago.

Royal Air Force Raises Speed of Its Planes

London.—The huge fleet of the Royal air force is now undergoing the process of complete re-equipment for the benefit of speed and as a result of the lessons learned from the research which led to Great Britain's victory in the Schneider cup races.

Roughly, the Royal air force now is passing from the 150-mile per hour stage to the dizzy pace of 180. The classes of aircraft concerned are the single seater fighter, the interception fighter, the fleet fighter and the day bomber. It will not be long before these four important classes are ready for service with their new equipment.

The Bristol "bulldog" is the new fighter with which four squadrons of the R. A. F. will be equipped, a type which with full service load has a speed of 174 miles per hour at 15,000 feet. It takes this machine but 27 minutes to reach 26,500 feet, at which height it is still below its ceiling.

Spends Time in Bed to Escape Colds

Berlin.—Because he feared contracting a cold, Fritz Babel, living in a German village, spent the greater part of his life in bed. He finally died of a broken blood vessel when a visitor raised a window in the stuffy room in which he lay.

LIFER ACQUITS MAN WHO SERVED 5 YEARS

Barber Is Convicted of Crime Despite Alibi.

Marquette, Mich.—Whether Stanley Ridler of Detroit is serving 12½ to 25 years in the Michigan state prison at Jackson for a crime he did not commit is a question to which Arthur D. Wood, pardon and parole commissioner, is seeking the answer.

Anthony Machus, serving life in Marquette branch prison, has told Mr. Wood that he and an unnamed companion, now dead, carried out the hold-up for which Ridler was sentenced. Machus said he had kept silent because he did not wish to implicate his companion, but the death of the latter recently, he said, had removed this motive.

Believes Story.

Mr. Wood said he had gone over the Ridler case recently and was inclined to believe that Machus was telling the truth. Ridler has insisted all the time that he is innocent. Mr. Wood intimated he would recommend a pardon for Ridler if his investigation bore out the story told by Machus.

Ridler was found guilty October 25, 1924, of holding up John A. Dietrich, superintendent, and Frank G. Welbon, auditor of the Detroit Twist Drill company, February 10, 1923, as they were transporting an $8,300 pay roll. Ridler was convicted on his third trial, the first two juries disagreeing. His defense was an alibi.

Mr. Wood said his inquiries showed that at the time of the pay roll robbery Ridler owned a five-chair barber shop and was in a comfortable financial condition. At his first trial the jury stood 9 to 3 for acquittal and at the second trial the vote was 11 to 1 for a verdict of not guilty.

Machus a Slayer.

Between his second and third trials Ridler disappeared and his bond was forfeited. He was arrested later at the home of a relative. Ridler also was arrested in the slaying of Malcolm McGregor at the Halfway house, owned jointly by Ridler and Harry (Kid) Harris, but was dicharged when the chief witnesses were unable to identify him.

Machus, a Chicago gangster, was one of four men who killed Patrolman Casimir Kaliszewski while fleeing after taking $27,000 from the Chene street and Harper avenue branch of the Central Savings bank, now the First National bank.

His companions were Stanley (Big Stack) Podulski, his cousin, John Podulski, and Walter Filipkowski. Machus, John Podulski, and Filipkowski were given life for killing Kaliszewski, while Stanley Podulski, convicted of another robbery, was given 20 to 40 years.

Friends Come to Aid of Old Book Seller

St. Louis.—Rare bits of binding, first editions, beautifully printed and bound volumes, and just ordinary musty, second-hand books have been relegated to the ash heap—superseded by the radio and talkies—according to George T. Tourville, dean of St. Louis booksellers.

For 50 years St. Louis book lovers had been dropping into George's shop to browse among the volumes, and George, always ready to gossip about his books, enjoyed a lucrative income.

But with the advent of the radio and the talkies, people were no longer interested in George's musty, dusty volumes, and the veteran bookseller found himself in financial straits.

Friends of Tourville, some of them men who as lads munched their sandwiches in his book shop, while they spent their noon hour devouring a volume, have come to the rescue.

These friends have devised a plan to refinance the shop and put it on a paying basis. They plan to incorporate the shop and issue stock. Fifty shares will be sold to provide a working capital, Tourville receiving the remaining which will be non-voting stock until dividends equal the amount subscribed.

The veteran bookman will remain in charge of his beloved books.

Use Ultra Violet Rays in Crime Prevention

New York.—Science's latest contribution to law enforcement agencies was discussed today, following a demonstration of a new device for burglar protection which sets off an alarm as soon as an invisible beam of ultra violet rays is interrupted or disturbed by an intervening body.

The rays may be used to asphyxiate any intruder with a barrage of tear gas or set off silent alarms.

Another demonstration showed how the photo-electric cell or "electric eye" may be used. Persons entering a room may be counted automatically as they cross a beam of light thrown across a doorway, the shadow of a passing body causing the "electric eye" to communicate with a counting machine.

Man With Wooden Leg Loses Other Leg in Fall

New York.—Speaking of hard luck—Thomas Zoulick fell in front of a subway train. When the police emergency squad extricated him, they found that his right leg had been broken. If the injury had befallen the left leg, it would have been trivial. The left leg is wooden.

ANCIENT VILLAGE FOUND IN YUCATAN

Explorer Discovers Town Not on Any Map.

Washington.—An occupied Indian village, surrounded by a high stone wall, has been discovered in Yucatan by Capt. Robert R. Bennett of this city, who is conducting an important expedition in that land of ancient civilization, under auspices of the Museum of the American Indian, New York city.

"This village," said a statement from the museum, "is not on any map that is known and its discovery is of the greatest importance, particularly as it is one of the few walled villages known to be in existence in Yucatan." No description of the occupants was given.

"The ruins are about 2,000 years old, according to one stela dated A. D. 260," said a statement based on a letter from Captain Bennett. "They cover a vast area of ground, but nothing was found in the way of art.

"The mounds are very high, with small temples on top, and ranges of buildings between them. The grand level plaza is reached by two terraces with steps varying from 150 to 200 feet in width.

"After climbing one of the highest pyramids Captain Bennett saw unnumbered mounds and buildings, with another extremely high mound some miles directly to the east. Other explorers have noted the two lakes at Coba, but from this high pyramid the expedition noted four of them in a line, running northwest to southwest; the largest is about one-half mile wide and three-fourths of a mile long. This is the one which Col. Charles A. Lindbergh tried to alight on during his recent aerial explorations to Yucatan, but he found it too small for this purpose and could only skim over it and rise again."

Captain Bennett reported the country is extremely wild and unexplored.

The expedition also includes another Washingtonian, Crawford Johnson, son of Charles H. Johnson. The party left Valladolid on January 13 with six Indians and nine mules, going first to Coba.

Only One U. S. General Died in Action in War

Washington.—But one American general officer was killed in action during the World war, analysis of War department official records disclosed. Two other general officers died from nonbattle causes prior to the armistice, but only one officer above the grade of colonel is listed in the battle casualties for officers of the American expeditionary forces.

The death of one general officer during the years of American participation in the war contrasts with the death of ninety-three generals in the French army during the World war. Forty-one of the French died in action.

Brig. Gen. Edward Sigerfoos of Ohio, who went overseas as a colonel in command of the one hundred fifty-second depot brigade of the Seventy-seventh division, died of wounds in October, 1918. An infantry officer, he was mortally wounded while fighting with his men at the front.

Another officer who went abroad with high rank and was killed in battle was Brig. Gen. Henry Hill of Quincy, Ill. After Brigadier General Hill, a National Guard officer, arrived in France at the head of the sixty-fifth infantry brigade in the Thirty-third division, he was given the choice of becoming a colonel in the service of supply or a major in the line. Brigadier General Hill was killed in action after accepting a major's commission.

The American total battle casualties were 50,475. Of this number 2,014 were officers.

Baby Killed With Scissors Found in Berlin Theater

Berlin.—The watchman of the Nollendorf theater, in making his rounds following the Sunday night performance, found the murdered body of a new born girl baby in a dark corner of a side room just off the auditorium proper, the police revealed today. A pair of bloody embroidery scissors with which the child had been stabbed to death lay nearby.

Chicken Blood Saves Boy, Ill With Pneumonia

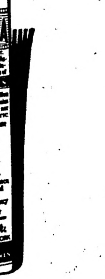
Lincoln, Neb.—Six-year-old Gene Roland owes his life to a chicken. Doctors had given up all hope of saving his life after he had been stricken with pneumonia. As a last resort a chicken blood transfusion was administered. Doctors announced it was successful.

Long Skirts Bad News for the Seals

Tacoma, Wash.—The return of longer skirts and corresponding increase in the length of fur coats may cause Uncle Sam to order 50,000 fur seals slain for their skins the coming summer.

Last year 41,000 skins were taken from the Pribilof herds, that number being sufficient to fill the demand for such elite furs. With the knee length coat, not as much seal skin was required as will be the case in the newer mode.

For any BABY



We can never be sure just what makes an infant restless, but the remedy can always be the same. Good old Castoria! There's comfort in every drop of this pure vegetable preparation, and not the slightest harm in its frequent use. As often as Baby has a fretful spell, is feverish, or cries and can't sleep, let Castoria soothe and quiet him. Sometimes it's a touch of colic. Sometimes constipation. Or diarrhea—a condition that should always be checked without delay. Just keep Castoria handy, and give it promptly. Relief will follow very promptly; if it doesn't, you should call a physician.

All through babyhood, Castoria should be a mother's standby; and a wise mother does not change to stronger medicines as the child grows older. Castoria is readily obtained at any drugstore, and the genuine easily identified by the Chas. H. Fletcher signature that appears on every wrapper.

"First Aid—Home Remedy Week" Coming

The Good Samaritan is pictured as "The First First Aid" in the national reminder which has been sent to druggists all over America, announcing the 9th anniversary of "First Aid—Home Remedy Week," fixed for March 16-23.

The idea of an advertising-merchandising one-a-year drive timed with spring house cleaning was given to the drug world by Sterling Products, Incorporated, in 1922. Preparedness for meeting accident or sudden illness is emphasized as a sensible and seasonable sales plan which serves to alleviate needless suffering and undoubtedly save life.

The National Association of Retail Druggists sponsored this ad-sales plan and later added Pharmacy Week as an autumn festival for intensive advertising and salesmanship in the drug world.

The National Wholesale Druggists Association and the National Association of Drug Clerks have joined the N. A. R. D. in establishing these festivals of selling as Spring and Autumn fixtures for the welfare of humanity.

"Fill That Medicine Chest Now" is the slogan of "First Aid—Home Remedy Week," and has been from the beginning. It was Dr. William E. Weiss, himself a graduate from the ranks of retail druggists, who first saw the value of "First Aid—Home Remedy Week," and wherever live-wire druggists have co-operated by showing a window filled with suggestive first aids both for accident or illness, and using their home newspaper advertising space, they have added cheerfully to their March business.

Bayer Aspirin

Needless Pain!

Don't be a martyr to unnecessary pain.

Lots of suffering is, indeed, quite needless.

Headaches, for example. They come without warning, but one can always be prepared. Bayer Aspirin tablets bring immediate relief. Keep a bottle at the office. Carry the small tin in your pocket. Then you won't have to hunt a drugstore, or wait till you get home.

And don't think Bayer Aspirin is only good for headaches, sore throats, and colds! Read the proven directions for relieving neuralgic, neuritic, rheumatic, and other aches and pains. Remembering, of course, that the quick comfort from these tablets is not a cure; for any continued pain, see a doctor.

Bayer Aspirin is genuine. Protect yourself by looking for that name. Always the same. Always safe. Never hurts the heart.

Government Loans Continue

"Any Minnesota bank can and will protect the farmer having wheat to sell' against the extremely low prices of the current cash market", says L. R. Roberts, Treasurer of the Minnesota Wheat Growers.

"The Wheat Growers", active in Minnesota as distributer of the loan funds provided to assist the farmer in marketing his grain so as to secure a fair price for it, has made arrangement with all banks in the state to handle these loans. The banks have full information how the farmer may secure the Federal Farm Board loan on wheat in the elevator, and also have all papers necessary to place each and every farmer in their territory in position as a qualified borrower of the Wheat Loan without delay.

At current prices the grower can borrow at least ten cents per bushel more than his wheat sells for. This is made possible by the establishment of the Stabilization Corporation with authority and finance capable of holding co-op grain off the market until the market price at least equals the loan value.

The only thing that now prevents every farmer from securing the full benefit of this Federal Board action, is his own negligence in taking advantage of the offer. The marketing agreement made necessary by the provision in the Marketing Act that every farmer must be affiliated with a cooperative marketing association, applies only to wheat actually delivered on the 1929 crop, Mr. Roberts assures us. The 1930 crop is untouched by this agreement, leaving it up to the farmer to sell that crop in line with the Farm Board program if -and only if- he is satisfied with the service rendered.

Mr. Roberts could not say how long the present Federal Farm Board loan offer will stand open, but suggests that all farmers wishing to take advantage of it will see their bankers and make arrangements at the earliest possible moment.

Prosperity Indicated By Trainload Shipments

The Maytag Company, Newton, Iowa, world's largest manufacturers of washers, reports the shipment of five trainloads of new Maytags to this territory.

The new Maytag washer, announced to the public March 9th, met with an immediate demand which is keeping the big factory busy. Advance dealer orders, anticipating public acceptance of the new washer, enabled the Maytag brances to place initial orders for trainload lots.

With this very favorable start for the new year and the gratifying response to the new Maytag, there is every indication that 1930 will be another record year for the Maytag Company. This will make the eighth consecutive year, in which Maytag has led the entire washer industry in volume of sales.

Abie's Irish Rose

Local people may look forward to a special treat at the movie theatre next Tuesday, April 1st, when the 12 reel super production Abie's Irish Rose will be presented.

The picture was adapted from the famous stageplay of the same name. No other play can boast of as long a run on the stage as Abie's Irish Rose. It was 5 years on Broadway. It has been shown in 14 different countries. More than 18 million people have seen it as a play.

Here is a picture that fairly bristles with drama, heart-interest and comedy. Nobody should miss seeing it.

County Financial Statement

On the inside of this issue you will find the official proceedings of the March 4th, meeting of the county commissioners and the financial statement of Marshall county for the year of 1929.

File your copies of this statement and other proceedings away for future reference.

NOTICE

Beginning on April 1st, we will take in cream three days of the week, Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays.

Henry Castle, Sr.-Her son, an over-burdened business man — Walter Steinhauer
Mrs. Helen Castle, His butterfly wife—Emma Furr
Iris Castle, Their ultra-modern daughter—Agnes Nohre
Henry Castle Jr. Their pampered son—Johnny Doran
Lindy Craige, An orphan and distant cousin of the Castles--Ferne Peterson
Bob Eaton, The young man next door—Oscar Fosholm
Brown, An officer of the law—Chester Larson

Watch for date of presentation!

On Thursday March twentieth the assembly was filled to its outmost capacity when the fifth, sixth, seventh, and eighth grades and the high school students gathered in the assembly. Supt. Vieths then presented to us Mr. Willems, who represented the Department of Conservation of the State of Minnesota.

Mr. Willems showed some very interesting slides on the conservation of forests, game, and fish, also how very important these are in the State of Minnesota.

We are very grateful to Mr. Willems for his interesting lecture and slides. Mr. Willems is the district ranger and lives at Warroad.

All the teachers attended the Concordia College Choir Concert at Thief River Falls Tuesday evening.

Verna Johnson and Walter Steinhauer have been absent from school.

Julius Faimen returned to school Monday after an absence of three weeks.

Seventh and Eighth Grades

Leroy Reierson and Reuben Carlson are sick with the mumps this week,

The eighth grade arithmetic class is studying the rule of the pythagoras and square root.

The seventh graders have finished their booklets on Minnesota. Colored pictures of the state flag and state flower, "Lady's Slippers" were secured which added to the attractiveness of the booklets.

The following pupils have satisfactorly passed a penmanship test which will exempt them from penmanship drill for the remainder of the term.

Beaulah Bennes, Margaret Davis, Carl Frederickson, Minerva Hanson, Deloros Moberg, Irvin Hagglund, Clara Sandberg, Clarence Sandberg, Gladys Sanoden, Eunice Johnson; Clara Nelson, Agnes Engebritson, Ethel Nohre and Esther Westdin.

Fifth and Sixth Grades

The fifth grade Round Table will give a short program for the sixth grade on Friday afternoon. Eleanor and Joyce are arranging the program and refreshments.

The sixth grade geography class is making individual booklets on Asia to correlate with their Museum table.

We had four little visitors Friday afternoon. They were: Lois Hanson, Estelle Redal, Betty Lorentson and Buddy Hanson.

Third and Fourth Grades

The Third graders added a red brick to their wall in the weekly reader race.

The fourth graders won in the five hundred mile drive, Arithmetic race.

They have started another race and the 3rd graders have driven 200 miles and the 4th graders have gone only a 100 miles.

They have started another race in cleanliness.

First and Second Grades

Easter is coming! A sure sign of this is found in the first and second grade room, by the rabbits, Easter chicks, and Easter baskets.

Both grades are making Easter bunnies; covered with cotton, which they can take home at Easter time.

DEADLINE NEARS FOR CLAIMS OF VETERANS

Minnesota Legion leaders remind world war veterans and their dependents that only little time remains during which to file government compensation claims before the April 6 deadline.

Failure to file a claim in time, bars the veteran from securing future benefits. Disabled veterans or their dependents should file their claims with the nearest Legion post, with Legion state headquarters, the State Soldier Welfare Bureau, or the Veterans Bureau.

"Every veteran who has any inkling of a disability should apply now, irrespective of its nature or origin." Legion leaders warn: "It will cost nothing to file and may help in the future. Veterans are also reminded that government insurance is still available at reasonable rates."

Farewell Party

The people of Holt and community gave Mr. and Mrs. Walter Larson and family a farwell party at the community hall on Saturday evening. Everybody enjoyed a good time.

Mr. and Mrs. Larson were given a sum of money as a remembrance of two and a half years stay here.

Hagglund to Iowa

B. C. Hagglund, editor and publisher of several poetry magazines published at the News printery here, left on Tuesday for Clermont, Iowa, where he has taken a position on the Clermont Weekly American.

Rev. Redal made several trips to Warren this week to visit on sick calls with Chris Rustad who is at a hospital there.

Auto and Style Show at Thief River Falls This Week

The fourth annual auto and style show will be presented at Theif River Falls this week under the auspices of the American Legion of that city, and indications are that this year's exposition will excell in every way those held in preceeding years. An unusually good program of vaudeville acts will be presented Saturday evening and a style show, presenting the latest styles for both men and women will be featured Friday evening. The Gopher Dance Band of Minneapolis has been secured for the dancing which will take place each evening.

Card of Thanks

We wish to express our thanks to the people of Holt and community and others for the fine farewell surprise party which they gave us on Saturday night and for the sum of money which they gave us as a rememberance of our stay here;

Mr. and Mrs. Walter Larson and family.

Notice of Annual Meeting

The annual meeting of the Farmers and Village Switchboard Company will be held at the Community Hall at Holt, on Monday, April 7th, at 1 o'clock p. m., for the purpose of electing officers and transaction of any other business that may come before the meeting.

Have Kidneys Examined By Your Doctor

Take Salts to Wash Kidneys if Back Pains You or Bladder Bothers

Flush your kidneys by drinking a quart of water each day, also take salts occasionally, says a noted authority, who tells us that too much rich food forms acids which almost paralyze the kidneys in their efforts to expel it from the blood. They become sluggish and weaken; then you may suffer with a dull misery in the kidney region, sharp pains in the back or sick headache, dizziness, your stomach sours, tongue is coated, and when the weather is bad you have rheumatic twinges. The urine gets cloudy, full of sediment, the channels often get sore and irritated, obliging you to seek relief two or three times during the night.

To help neutralize these irritating acids, to help cleanse the kidneys and flush off the body's urinous waste, get four ounces of Jad Salts from any pharmacy here; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days, and your kidneys may then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for years to help flush and stimulate sluggish kidneys; also to neutralize the acids in the system so they no longer irritate, thus often relieving bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is inexpensive, cannot injure and makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink.

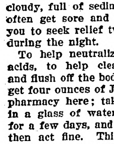
Many Weddings in Sight



When some girls are already thinking of the wedding ring their health fails, they become nervous, highstrung, irritable, and through this loss of control many a young woman loses her future happiness. One woman said: "I have taken the 'Prescription' during expectancy and when I did, I got along so much better than when I did not take it, for it always kept me feeling so well and strong."—Mrs. Amanda Visger, 1851 Wisconsin Ave., Beloit, Wis.

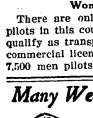
Here Is the Final Word

"Father, why is victory always pictured as a woman?"

"Wait, my son, until you get married; then you will find out."

Oklahoma Girl Strong as Boy



"Louise Alice was fretful, nervous and all run-down from whooping cough," says Mrs. F. J. Kolar, 1730 West 22nd St., Oklahoma City, Okla. "The little I could force her to eat wouldn't ever digest. She became underweight, sallow and weak.

"Then I decided to try California Fig Syrup, and the results surprised me. Her bowels started working immediately, and in little or no time she was eating so she got to be a pest at the table, always asking us to pass things. Her weight increased, her color improved and she began to romp and play again like other children. Now she's the picture of health, and strong as a boy."

Pleasant-tasting, purely vegetable California Fig Syrup acts surely and quickly to cleanse your child's stomach and bowels of the souring waste that is keeping her half-sick, bilious, sallow, feverish, listless, weak and puny. But it's more than a laxative. It tones and strengthens the stomach and bowels so these organs continue to act normally, of their own accord.

Over four million bottles used a year shows its popularity. Ask for it by the full name, "California Fig Syrup," so you'll get the genuine endorsed by physicians for 50 years.

Two more broadsides smote the privateer in the interval required to tack out of the danger zone, and when she recovered her raking position the Badger continued to flail her with several heavy guns that could be aimed for'ard. A lucky shot dismounted a twelve-pounder and puddles of blood soaked the sand the powder boys had sprinkled across the deck. But one by one the Badger's guns ceased firing, as her hull was racked from end to end by the relentless broadsides of the Yankee brig, and presently the Centurion hauled out of the smoke bank to survey the situation, the Long Tom alone hammering away at the unfortunate Britisher.

The Badger was a dreadful sight, her remaining sails split and tattered, her rigging awry, her upper works largely demolished. And she looked to be somewhat down by the head. But the White Ensign floated at the jagged peak of her mizzen, apparently nailed there, at intervals in the riven belt of her bulwarks grinned the muzzles of cannon and one of her chase guns that had been hauled aft belched defiance of the privateer—"We're not licked yet," it growled.

Fellowes examined his own ship, received hasty reports from his officers. Five men wounded, three killed. No damage worth mentioning aloft, except for the foretopmast. The hull sound, the well dry.

"We'll board," he decided, and a murmur of assent expressed his hearers' opinion. "Mr. Noggle, I'm turning over the ship to you. I shall be on the fo'c's'le with the marines. Mr. Spencer, you'll remain aboard, and fight the batteries, if necessary. Mr. Breed, I'll have you take the sta'b'd watch after the marines. That will be all, gentlemen."

Fellowes clung to a forestay, atop of the Centurion's bulwarks, peering into the furry smokeclouds that swirled and trembled to the throbbing cadence of cannon and musketry. Behind him the fo'c's'le was crammed with men. Tom Grogan, hefting an ax in a knotty fist, crouched at his captain's feet.

"Can ye see her, messmate?" he croaked anxiously, barriers of rank forgotten.

"Not yet—Ah, there's her maintruck!"

A wild cheer announced that others had seen it, too. The Long Tom thundered brazenly, the la'b'd battery boomed by divisions, and the concussions blew the smoke upward to expose the Badger's hull, rolling sluggishly like a wounded whale, half a cable's length distant.

"Hard over, Mr. Noggle," Fellowes hailed the sailing master. "Ready, you grapnel men!"

The privateer slid easily around the sloop-of-war's bow, poking her bowsprit into the tattered boarding nettings aft of the forechains. Grapnels jangled across the narrow belt of water, and slowly, very slowly, the two vessels ground together, broadside guns muzzle to muzzle, gun crews stabbing at each other through the ports, smallarms rattling in a savage crescendo.

From his perch Fellowes looked down upon the Badger's shattered deck. Scores of hostile faces scowled up at him. His eyes coolly scrutinized the Britishers for his enemy's face. And misgiving stirred in him, for Collishawe was nowhere visible. Curry, the first lieutenant, and a midshipman were the only officers in sight. The Badger was a shambles, although her crews were still unbeaten, surging forward to meet the Americans when Fellowes jumped among them.

Cuffee had lingered for one more shot with the Long Tom, and leaped from the hot breech of the piece to the brig's bulwarks, yelling his war cry. A second leap carried him over the heads of the boarders, fighting to widen their foothold on the Badger's fo'c's'le, and into the midst of the enemy, who, for the first time, recoiled from the negro's cutlass and terrible, scarred face — "Grogan's nigger!" "Gawd, 'ere's Cuffee!" The old superstitions were aroused—"He'll tear ye wiv his teeth!" "A man-eater, lads!"

The resistance commenced to weaken. Still as numerous as the boarders, the Badger's crew suffered mainly from their dearth of officers, which became an absolute lack after Joe Doak had bayoneted Mr. Curry and Tom had disposed of the lone surviving midshipman. Where was Collishawe? Fellowes asked himself again. The Britishers would have been leaderless, if it hadn't been for Bob Clinch. The bosun was indefatigable, wielding a gory boarding pike, shouting hoarse admonitions to his followers.

But one man's steadfastness couldn't overcome the driving power of a crew who knew they were victorious, plus the superstitious fear engendered by Cuffee. Clinch, himself, realized this latter factor, and bravely sought the negro in personal combat—vastly to Cuffee's delight.

"Yaa-aa-aaah, Bob! Cuffee goin' cut yo' nose fo' eat."

"No nigger desarter can stand up to me," growled Bob, thrusting desperately. "'Ere's daylight in ye."

But Cuffee parried the pike with a single blow of his left arm, and raked his cutlass point down the unscarred side of the bosun's face. Poor Clinch, blinded by the flow of blood, staggered and would have fallen if Tom Grogan hadn't caught him.

The capture of Clinch disheartened the Britishers. They had kept together for'ard of the mainmast, close ranks fairly impenetrable; but now, as Cuffee whirled into them, hacking and hewing, parrying strokes with his bare hand, filed teeth gleaming ferociously in the shiny black mask of his face, a score of Americans wedging after him, they developed a tendency to scatter into isolated groups, which surrendered as rapidly as they were surrounded. Fellowes was leading an attack upon one of these groups when a pistol cracked behind it, and the ghost of a quarter-deck voice pealed languidly above the click-clack of steel:

"I'll shoot every man who tries to touch that flag!"

The startled bluejackets dodged right and left, flinging their weapons from them, and there, propped against the break of the poop, lay Collishawe, his eyes blazing in a face drained of all color, his body, from the waist down, a bundle of soggy bandages. Near by sprawled one of his sailors, dead, the smoking pistol in his hand telling its own story. While the Americans watched, he dropped the weapon, and selected another from a row convenient to his grasp, cocking it and shaking the priming in the pan as carelessly as though not an enemy was in sight.

Fellowes was embarrassed, uncertain how to act, misliking the idea of violence against a wounded foe. But Cuffee was not so compunctious. The negro stole aft along the port bulwarks, and threw an empty water-bucket which brushed the pistol from Collishawe's hand, and then, before the Englishman could replace it, kicked the remaining weapons out of reach.

Collishawe had been wrenched around by the blow, and a trickle of blood began to seep from his bandages; but not a muscle twitched in his face, and his one indication of feeling was a curious glance at Fellowes. The Long Islander was more at a loss than ever. He had obtained his supreme objective. Here, before him, lay the man who had flogged him, wounded, defeated, at his mercy. The Badger was his. He had humiliated Collishawe as much as he had dreamed of doing. And the words that came to his lips were consolatory!

"Sorry you're wounded. What can we do for you?"

"Nothing, thanks," answered Collishawe. "I'm done for."

"Oh, no! My surgeon—"

"Have him spend his spare time with my men who need it." The Englishman's tone was inflexible, but Fellowes began to detect a slightly hesitant quality in it, a hidden weakness. "Our Scotchman was bowled out."

"But won't you let me have a look?"

"No use. My legs are pulp. One of your d—n' twenty-four pounder shot."

Fellowes looked away uncomfortably. He hadn't envisaged this ending to his quest. Suddenly he heard Collishawe speaking again.

"I say, you're a sticker. That was a well-fought action. 'Used your head. Did you, by any chance, plan that battery for me?"

Fellowes nodded. Collishawe frowned, plucking at the bandages around his thighs.

Flags of the Confederacy

There were four Confederate flags. The first was selected by a committee of six persons of the Confederate congress. This flag did not meet with the approval of the people, as it too closely resembled the Union emblem. The second flag was designed by Edward C. Hancock in October, 1861. But as this was a battle flag it was not satisfactory, as the people wished a national emblem in addition to one for battle. On May 1, 1863, the Confederate congress selected the third flag. This also was disapproved for two reasons: The first, because it had two much white and resembled the flag of truce; and second, because it was too similar to the English white ensign. Finally on May 4, 1864, the national Confederate flag was approved.

World Flood

The ancient tradition common among all primitive peoples of a world-wide flood is now thought by scientists to have been sound. The cause of the ocean's rise may have been the melting of the ice-cap at the North pole at the end of the last Ice age, which occurred about 20,000 years ago. According to Sir Edgeworth David, famous Australian geologist, the level of the entire ocean would be raised about fifty feet if the whole Antarctic ice barrier melted. Practically every seaport town would then be under water.

Outline of Success

Our definition of success is unorthodox. We claim that any man who is honest, fair, tolerant, kindly, charitable of others and well behaved is a success, no matter what his station in life.—Jay E. House, in the Philadelphia Public Ledger.

Analyzing ...YOU...

With the New Science of Syllabics

By C. J. COFFMAN

Dean of All the Enumerators

Florence

Florence is Flora, the goddess of flowers, in Roman mythology. You are like that a good deal, as appears in your analysis.

The Flowing Motion of Florence's Arm.

Something within you seems to flow with a beautiful waving motion as I sit here at the request of a friend and take your name apart. In fact, the very first syllable in your name gives a sense of flow (FLO). The ancients made a part of your name, the OR, to mean light, the break of day, to set on fire.

Like the graceful, undulating, flowing motion of your arms and hands, the first part of your name, FLOR, comes to us. Combined with what we have already shown, it would mean the flowing of the dawn of light through the flowers.

This is a beautiful thought for your name to hold.

Even the EN carries on the idea, according to these old manuscripts that I am studying, for it means eye, and color.

Perhaps you, too, will find some special way to carry the light of love and a great organization of helpfulness, as did Florence Nightingale, who was the forerunner of the organization of the Red Cross.

Or, like Florence Trumbull Coolidge, to be the helpmate and real coworker to such a man as the son of our former President, John Coolidge. It may not be out of place to prophesy that these two young people will yet make a very extraordinary mark in the world.

In other lines, you would carry on in music, or one of the arts, and do things by which you may become happy in creation, even if not so famous in fact.

It does not take very much advice or direction for you. You have your ambition pretty well marked out, your pathway pretty well charted. So we can leave you to your fate, being well assured that it will be a good fate.

* * *

Ethel

"Keeping time, time, time, in a sort of runic rhyme," as Poe says, describes a good deal of your activities, Ethel.

Ethel's Strong Mouth.

There is no doubt that a great deal of happiness can result to you from this if you find the right one to keep time to. After all, it is better to be a happy time keeper, than an unhappy time driven leaf in the wind.

Two of your middle letters, HE, indicate a window or light, through which we may behold an inspiration. This inspiration might be some glory directly from God, as shown by the last letters of your name, EL.

So we see that one of your strongest bents would be the ministry. Speaking of the God-inspiration, it may be noted that Ethel Barrymore made one of the best impressions of her career in her play called "The Kingdom of God."

You do have a convincing way about you, helped by the strong, fine lines of your mouth.

This strong mouth enhances the value of the outstanding honesty shown in your face. Even though you might be keeping time for some one else, you do it honestly, but the thing I want to impress you with is your ability to do more for yourself.

Always remember that you are worth from two to four times more to yourself than anyone can pay you. Of course it depends upon your ability to apply your talent.

Your chief talent lays in anything that requires rhythm, or regular time. This might be music or dancing, more likely the latter. But whatever your ambition, don't sit and dream over it. Get up and go after it today. Go and see the person who can help you and ask them outright for a chance.

Music in History

The history of music goes back to antiquity. Even the primitive races have some forms of music and in ancient Egypt, Assyria, Greece, China, etc., there was considerable development of music and musical instruments. There are records of the harp in Egypt before 3000 B. C. Of course it is impossible to say who was the first musical composer or when music was first composed.

Chinese Superstition

Crews of Chinese ships believe that the "Wind God" follows all vessels, and attempts to sink them whenever possible. A favorite practice is to hang out long scrolls of paper, covered with fantastic designs, calculated to mislead this god as to the direction the ship will follow.

Never Forget Golden Rule

Lafayette's American Land

The land granted to General Lafayette is in Florida—all of township 1 north, range 1 east, containing 23,028.50 acres, was granted by congress to General Lafayette December 28, 1824, and title passed to him July 4, 1825. It was sold by order of General Lafayette many years since, and is now owned by a great many different persons.

Makes Life Sweeter

Children's stomachs sour, and need an anti-acid. Keep their systems sweet with Phillips Milk of Magnesia!

When tongue or breath tells of acid condition—correct it with a spoonful of Phillips. Most men and women have been comforted by this universal sweetener—more mothers should invoke its aid for their children. It is a pleasant thing to take, yet neutralizes more acid than the harsher things too often employed for the purpose. No household should be without it.

Phillips is the genuine, prescriptional product physicians endorse for general use; the name is important. "Milk of Magnesia" has been the U. S. registered trade mark of the Charles H. Phillips Chemical Co. and its predecessor Charles H. Phillips since 1875.

COULD HARDLY DO HER WORK

Strengthened by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Mission, Tex.—"I have used a good deal of your medicine and always find it gives wonderful help. I was feeling so weak and miserable that I had to lie down very often and I could hardly do my housework. I read in the paper how Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound had helped other women who were in the same condition so I said I will try it for myself. I am very much better now and I recommend this medicine, and will answer letters from women asking about it."—Mrs. J. W. Albertson, 1015 Miller Avenue, Mission, Texas.

LIGHTS of NEW YORK

By GRANT DIXON

Snooty Street

We might, today, take a stroll along snooty Fifty-seventh street, home of Carnegie and Steinway halls, the steel skeleton of a new hotel, a silversmith's, a foreign automobile agency and numerous shops devoted to expensive and sometimes useful things.

Across the way from Carnegie is an unusually large plate glass window, and behind it a strangely arresting display—a cabin motor boat of yacht proportions. I have often gazed at it and wondered how they ever got it there, so far from the water. It has been there for a year or two, and right now it is in dry dock and painters are going over its hull. Even a dry-land boat must be kept shipshape.

* * *

For Doggie

Farther along is a dog shop. No dogs are for sale, but merely the latest fashions in puppy accessories. Wealthy dogs must have just the right things, you know, and here is the place to get them. There are jeweled muzzles, fancy leather leashes, collars that might grace a dowager and fine warm blankets. And dogs, too, must be amused. So there are dog dolls—rubber hounds which may be played with and chewed. And there's a jack-in-the-box out of which pops a dog's head. Won't Suzette be surprised.

* * *

Orchids

There are several flower stores, and all feature orchids. New models of orchids come out oftener than next year's super-sixteen automobiles. This year the debutantes have chosen green orchids. And so the green orchids are the most expensive. Or perhaps it is the other way around. The debbies may have picked the flowers because of price. In one shop some green orchids are exhibited under a glass dome, just like the old artificial flower and hair exhibits in the stuffy parlors of yesteryear. Even on Fifty-seventh street, however, are to be found cut-rate flowers. In one shop a beautiful orchid may be bought for $1.50.

* * *

Automobiles

And automobiles! There is the foreign agency, whose product sells for $16,000 minimum. And there are three second-hand auto shops in a row—no bargain establishments, be assured. Each of these has a red car in the front row, which must mean something. Three second-hand cars really look better than new. They are beautifully and gaudily painted. Apparently, the people who buy them do so for show. There is no need to get a brand new motor if the paint is new.

A Proud Man

A gray-haired New Yorker whose position in both the financial and artistic worlds is unquestioned is very proud of his personal appearance. An inveterate theatergoer, he always takes care to arrive after the curtain has risen, so that every one will notice him.

On a recent trip he was, as usual, perfectly groomed for every occasion. At times he could not resist showing off a bit, and once he paraded the length of his private train in his lounging pajamas—an exquisite creation of blue trimmed with red, and set off with a red stock tie.

All went well until one morning when the stop-over at a fashionable country club called for a golf outfit. He was as pleased as usual with his habiliments until he saw his secretary.

"Come here," he shouted, infuriated. "What do you mean by this? Your trousers hang better than mine!"

French Convict Ship Held in Awe by Natives

Havre, France. — The gruesome French convict ship, La Martiniere, has arrived in this port with a cargo of Martinique rum brought on its return voyage from taking a load of French convicts to Devil's island in French Guinea.

After unloading the rum the ship will proceed to La Rochelle to wait for another cargo of humans condemned to pass the remainder of their days in the French penal island.

Even the natives of this town are superstitious of the convict vessel and do not like to associate with members of its crew. Every time it carries a load of convicts, weighted with despair and misery, from the shores of France there are several deaths on board ship.

Canadian Mines Reach High Levels in Output

Ottawa, Ont. — Canadian mines yielded new high levels in output during 1929 for the fourth consecutive year.

Total production of metals as a group had a value of $151,327,000 as against $132,012,454 in 1928, the greatest gain.

In the order of their total values, the leading mineral products of Canada are: coal, copper, gold, nickel, cement, lead, asbestos, clay products, silver, zinc, stone, natural gas, sand and gravel, lime, petroleum, gypsum, cobalt, salt, and platinum metals.

Smothers in Straw

Saint-Brieuc, France.—A farm worker near here met his death in an unusual fashion. He slipped on a stone and lost consciousness when he fell. His face was buried in some straw and he was smothered.

RASPUTIN'S DAUGHTER NOW CABARET DANCER

Ekes Out Meager Living in Montmartre, France.

Paris, France.—The daughter of the monk Rasputin, who wielded powerful influence over the czarina of Russia, Mme. Marie Solovieva-Rasputin, earns a meager living as a cabaret dancer in Montmartre.

Since she came to France with many thousands of other Russians after the Red revolution, the daughter of Rasputin has experienced many vicissitudes and has worked in many humble stations in order to support herself and her two children.

"I consider myself lucky in being able to dance in the fashionable night resorts in the bright-light district of Paris, where thousands of Americans come to amuse themselves," Mme. Solovieva-Rasputin said. "I do not care for the cabaret, but I find it easier to dance than to work as a kitchen hand, as I was forced to do not long after I came here.

In Taxi Smashup.

"I have been dogged by the same sinister influence which fate seemed to exercise over my father, because I was recently involved in a taxi smash and was unable to work for a time, and it was only because of gifts from charitable people that I and my two daughters, seven and five years old, have been able to exist."

The daughter of the Russian monk is intensely religious. At night, after the bright lights of Montmartre are dimmed, she goes to her room and prays before the ikon, which is one of the few legacies she possesses from her father. The ikon was found near his body after his assassination.

"I carry this ikon with me always, cherishing it as a rare memento of my unhappy father. Whatever may have been said about him, my father was the incarnation of sagacity and common sense and he was also gifted with the power of clairvoyance. Many times he said: 'When I am dead the dynasty will be overthrown.' Three months after his assassination the revolution broke out, bathing Russia in bloodshed and sweeping away such small fortunes as we possessed.

Plans United States Visit.

"My father was poor and after his death our plight was terrible. My husband was an officer in the army of Admiral Koltcha. When the Reds defeated the White army we fled from Russia and sought refuge here in France."

Rasputin's daughter is planning a visit to the United States, where she hopes to lecture on her father and his relations with the Russian imperial family.

Jokes to Be Repressed Against Fascist Regime

Rome.—Jokes and sarcastic witticisms against the Fascist regime are henceforth to be sternly repressed. Clubs and cafes have heard many jests against the regime, generally in good part, but often with a spice of malice. The jests have come mostly from Fascists themselves, and derive from the essentially Latin habit of making fun of oneself. Probably there has been a little exaggeration in this direction, whence the circular of Secretary Augusto Turati to the provincial secretaries of the Fascist party urging that an end be put to this private form of lampooning.

Mussolini himself smilingly admitted the existence of this lampoonery in an address to the senate when he said that the "jus mormorandi" or right to murmur was a tolerable thing.

The Roman tradition of popular jests is ancient, and in the Eighteenth and early Nineteenth century the famous statue of Pasquino outside the Braschi palace, formerly the ministry of the interior, used to be the site where the city wits hung their wisecracks known as "pasquinades" late at night for the delectation of the morning public.

Yellowstone Park Elk Change Place of Abode

Yellowstone Park.—One hundred and ten American elk, born and reared in Yellowstone National park, have changed their permanent place of abode and will be listed under different localities when the census enumerators for 1930 come around.

The rangers in Yellowstone National park lately have been busy filling orders for these Wapiti, as they were known to the Indians, and shipments have been made to various parts of the country. Three carloads, two consisting of thirty animals each and one of thirty-one, were sent to the Izaak Walton league at Moscow, Idaho, for release at Bovill, Idaho; the Izaak Walton league at Dayton, Wash., for distribution in that locality; and to R. Nadeau, Saugus, Calif., to roam the hills in the vicinity of his ranch in the southern part of the state.

Hen Lays Eggs With Two and Three Yolks

East Orange, N. J.—Omnibus eggs are the usual thing with a hen owned by Mrs. George Fyre here. The hen lays eggs three inches long and almost two inches in diameter with two and three yolks. One egg hatched Siamese twin chicks that soon died.

CHILDREN SLAIN IN BRONZE AGE FOUND

Bones Dug Up in Jericho Prove Early Sacrifice.

Jericho, Palestine.—The practice of child-sacrifice on the site of Jericho in the Bronze age was revealed by inspection of the latest excavations made here under direction of the British archeologist, Prof. Walter Garstang.

Tragic aspects of ancient life within the walled city before the Israelite conquest were revealed during excavation of the bones of children killed sacrificially in the years prior to Joshua's successful assault on the city.

The correspondent was accompanied by Professor Garstang on a visit to the excavations at old Jericho where the Sir Charles Marston expedition has been working some time.

The defensive citadel, twelve feet thick of exceptional height, was believed to have been built about 2,000 B. C. But the excavations have changed many previous assumptions about old Jericho, which was cursed and burned by Joshua.

The expedition has discovered that the earlier city had the largest wall and that the city began to decline and lose population, making necessary the building of smaller and more easily protected walls in later centuries.

The theory that an earthquake caused the collapse of the wall of Jericho, will be worked out by the expedition next, as this season's work will end shortly.

The biblical version is that Joshua was instructed to have his priests march around the wall seven days, blowing trumpets and then, on the seventh day, all the people shouted with a great shout and the wall fell flat and they marched in. The inhabitants of the besieged city were then slain and the city itself burned.

In the burned city, as it is exposed today, the remains of charred corn in a bin were seen which were there when the Israelites marched over the fallen wall.

Four Stowaways Brave Sharks to Flee Ship

New York.—A story of four stowaways, believed to have deserted from the navy, who braved a forty-five-minute swim in the shark-infested waters off Jamaica, was brought into port by Capt. William Kroll, master of the Statendam of the Holland-American line. The young men escaped the sharks, but landed in the custody of the United States navy, which is trying to identify them.

The Statendam, on a West Indies cruise, was steaming away from Colon, Canal Zone, on February 12, when the stowaways were discovered. They explained they had been part of the crew of a fruiter which had sailed without them.

"I could tell by their blue navy pants," said the master, "they had deserted from one of the American warships at the canal. I locked them up. Off Fort Yoral I sent for the stowaways. When the door was unlocked, the hospital was empty. They had escaped through the port hole.

"Later they were picked up and handed over to the United States cruiser Concord at Kingston."

Captain Kroll said the men went through the port hole and into the sea when the vessel was several miles off the coast.

Earth Thawed for Gold in New Alaskan Strike

Washington.—News of Alaska's latest gold strike in the vicinity of Poorman has reached the War department from Sergeant William N. Growden of the signal corps unit at Ruby, Alaska, who took five days' furlough to stake a claim.

Poorman is in the west central part of the territory, not far from Placerville, where gold recently attracted miners. Mike Kovas, Tom Gallagher and James August discovered the Poorman placer vein, Growden reported. When the sergeant and his companion, Chief Harry Pitka of the Kokrine Indians, reached the discovery, Kovas invited them to pan for dust.

Growden and the Indian broke off pieces of frozen earth, held the pan containing the earth in boiling water to thaw it and proceeded to obtain $2.96 worth of gold from two pans. Growden said he and the Indian mushed behind their dog team at 40 below zero, but many persons were converging on the strike.

Airplane Oil Demand Starts Shark Hunting

Anacortes, Wash.—It's going to be a tough year for sharks which abound from Puget sound to Alaska, in north Pacific waters.

Representatives for eastern makers of airplanes, automobiles and watches here declare the market is bare of shark liver oil, a fine grade of lubricant useful in these arts. To date there is a deficiency of 2,000 barrels.

Sharks, when caught, also yield leather and ivory and considerable amounts of fertilizer.

Mother Wills Ring, but Children Must Draw Lots

Brooklyn, N. Y.—When Mrs. Hannah Cohen died she provided in her will that all her property be divided equally among her 12 children, with the exception of a diamond ring for which, the will directed, 11 of the children should draw lots.

Any COLD

That cold may lead to something serious, if neglected. The time to do something for it is now. Don't wait until it develops into bronchitis. Take two or three tablets of Bayer Aspirin as soon as you feel a cold coming on. Or as soon as possible after it starts. Bayer Aspirin will head off or relieve the aching and feverish feeling—will stop the headache. And if your throat is affected, dissolve two or three tablets in a quarter-glassful of warm water, and gargle. This quickly soothes a sore throat and reduces inflammation and infection. Read proven directions for neuralgia, for rheumatism and other aches and pains. Genuine Bayer Aspirin is harmless to the heart.

BAYER ASPIRIN

Aspirin is the trade mark of Bayer Manufacture of Monoaceticacidester of Salicylicacid

Friendship is a great consoling boon, but the links must be forged on the anvil of time.

The devil tempts us not; 'tis we tempt him, beckoning his skill with opportunity.—George Eliot.

Finds Youth's Fountain!

"JUST one thing has contributed more than anything else in my life toward making me the radiantly happy woman I am today," writes Mrs. Walter Ruehl, of Glenbrook, Conn. "If this was selling at ten dollars a bottle instead of the few cents it costs, I would scrape the money together, and I don't mean maybe!"

"I guess a good many others feel the same way, judging by the number of people I know who swear by this 'Fountain of Youth.'"

Millions of people all over the world have discovered this simple secret, which is nothing but giving our bodies the internal lubrication that they need, as much as any machine. After you have taken Nujol for a few days, and have proved to yourself how it brightens your whole life, you will wonder how so simple a treatment can make such a great change in your health and your happiness. The reason is this:

Regularly as clock work, Nujol clears out of our bodies those poisons (we all have them) which slow us up, make us headachy, low in our minds.

Colorless and tasteless as pure water, Nujol cannot hurt you, no matter how long you take it. It is not a medicine. It contains no drugs. It forms no habit. It is non-fattening.

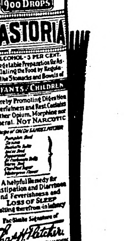
One Happy Woman Tells Where She Discovered It

Try Nujol yourself and see how much better you feel. Get a bottle in its sealed package at any drug store and be sure it's trademarked "Nujol." It costs but a few cents—and it makes you feel like a million dollars! Start taking Nujol this very night!

To have joy one must share it—happiness was born a twin.—Charles Kingsley.

Men don't talk much about the styles because they have been about the same since Andrew Jackson.

Children CRY for it



It may be the little stomach; it may be the bowels are sluggish. No matter what coats a child's tongue, its a safe and sensible precaution to give a few drops of Castoria. This gentle regulation of the little system soon sets things to rights. A pure vegetable preparation that can't harm a wee infant, but brings quick comfort —even when it is colic, diarrhea, or similar disturbance.

And don't forsake Castoria as the child grows older. If you want to raise boys and girls with strong systems that will ward off constipation, stick to good old Castoria; and give nothing stronger when there's any irregularity except on the advice of a doctor. Castoria is sold in every drugstore, and the genuine always bears Chas. H. Fletcher's signature on the wrapper.

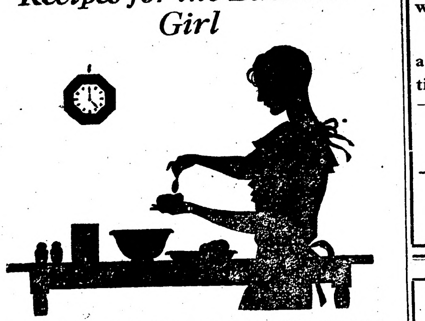
Recipes for the Bachelor Girl



THE bachelor girl who likes to cook her own meals and occasionally have a guest has difficulties confronting her which may be summed up in the phrase: How to buy little enough food to avoid waste.

But several agencies have combined to help her. Canners put out fruits and vegetables in eight-ounce cans which hold a cup and cost ten cents. Evaporated milk solves her milk problem, for it obviates the nuisance of attending to milk bottles and milk tickets and the problem of storing milk. Evaporated milk will keep well after being opened, if it is not all used at once, and the unopened cans can stand on the kitchen shelf ready at all times for use.

Recipes for Two

Some recipes which serve two and include this time-saving milk are:

Stuffed Tomatoes: Cut off stem and remove pulp of two large tomatoes. Mix two tablespoons chopped, canned okra with one tablespoon bread crumbs and season with salt and pepper. Fill tomatoes with mixture. Bake in a hot oven (450°) for fifteen minutes, then reduce heat to medium, 350°, for fifteen minutes. Make a cheese sauce by melting one tablespoon butter in a pan; add three tablespoons grated cheese and heat slowly until melted. Add one-fourth cup evaporated milk and heat until well blended. Pour over tomatoes and serve.

Salmon Patties: Remove bones and skin from a half-pound can of salmon. Add one and one-half teaspoons lemon juice, cayenne pepper, one-half teaspoon salt, one egg, one-half cup bread crumbs, one-fourth teaspoon baking powder and one-fourth cup evaporated milk diluted with one-fourth cup water. Mold into four patties. Place on an oiled tin and bake in a hot oven (425° F.) for five minutes, then reduce heat to 375° until browned.*

OFFICIAL PROCEEDINGS OF THE COUNTY BOARD, MARSHALL COUNTY, MINNESOTA

Adjourned meeting of the County Board held March 4th and 5th, 1930.

Meeting called to order by the Chairman at 10 o'clock A. M. All members present.

Minutes of Feb. 4th meeting read and approved as read.

Annual reports of fees, emoluments and gratuities of A. G. Lundgren, A. N. Lodoen, Ole Bergman, Ole Torgerson, A. S. Rokke and A. C. McMillin was examined and approved.

Application of Ole Skadsen for reduction of taxes in Town of New Maine was on motion recommended to Minnesota Tax Commission for their approval.

Call For Bids on Road Equipment

The bids were opened at 10 o'clock A. M. and the following bids were received:

Stocklands Sales Co., One Bates 80 Tractor, $5,650.00.

Nodak Tractor & Equipment Co., One Caterpillar 60, $4,486.50.

Borchert-Ingersoll Co., One Monarch 75, $5,618.00 F. O. B. St. Paul.

Motor Power Equipment Co., One Cletrac 60-80, $5,350.00.

Thorman W. Rosholt Co., One model 20 McCormick-Deering on traction crawlers and with lights and cab, $2,040.00 F. O. B. St. Paul.

Nodak Tractor & Equipment Co., One Caterpillar 20 with lights and cab, $2,326.50.

Motor Power Equipment Co., One United Tractor on traction crawlers with lights and cab, $2,286.00.

J. D. Adams Co., One No. 14 Leaning Wheels Grader weight 12,000 lbs., $2,700.00. One No. 8 maintaining grader, $1,397.50. One No. 61 Adams Maintainer, $785.00.

T. W. Rosholt Co., One Ryan 12-ft. power operated grader, $3,240.00. One Ryan dual blade high speed grader, $1,860.00.

Austin-Western Co., One 12-ft. Leaning wheel grader weight 10,000 lbs., $2,450.00.

Borchert-Ingersolls Co., One Gallion 12-ft. leaning wheel grader, $2,200.00.

Stockland Sales Co., One Highspeed Grayhound grader, $1,375.00. Stockland Whippet, $968.00.

Motor Power Equipment Co., One Shawnee highspeed No. 1, $1,416.00. One Shawnee No. 1 remote control for McCormick-Deering $1,205.00.

Nodak Tractor & Equipment Co., One caterpillar planer, $853.50.

Commissioner A. S. Rokke offered the following resolution in writing and moved its adoption:

Be it resolved that the bid of Borchert-Ingersoll Co., of St. Paul for one Monarch 75 tractor with canopy and electric lights for $5,618.00 F. O. B. St. Paul, Minn., be accepted and the County Engineer is authorized to sign an order for the same. The County Auditor is hereby directed to issue a warrant for said amount on the County Aid Road Fund to said Borchert-Ingersoll Co. on Aug. 10th, 1930.

Commissioner Ole Torgerson seconded the motion and the same being put, received a majority of the votes of the members of the County Board and was duly carried and was by the Chairman then presiding so declared.

Commissioner Ole Bergman offered the following resolution in writing and moved its adoption:

Be it resolved that the bid of Thorman W. Rosholt Co. of Minneapolis for one McCormick-Deering No. 20 on Traction Crawlers with electric lights for $2,040.00 F. O. B. St. Paul, be accepted and the County Engineer is directed to sign an order for the same. The County Auditor is directed to issue a warrant in said amount on the County Aid Road Fund to said Thorman W. Rosholt Co. on Aug. 10th, 1930.

Commissioner A. C. McMillin seconded the motion and the same being put received a majority of the votes of the members of the County Board and was duly carried and was by the Chairman then presiding so declared.

Commissioner A. C. McMillin offered the following resolution in writing and moved its adoption:

Be it resolved that the bid of the Motor Power Equipment Co. of St. Paul for one United Crawler with cab and electric lights, one Shawnee No. 1 Remote control for McCormick-Deering tractor, and one Shawnee No. 1 with front truck and canopy for $4,800.00 be accepted and the County Engineer is authorized to sign an order for the same. The County Auditor is directed to issue a warrant on the County Aid Road Fund for $2,564.00 and a warrant on the County Road and Bridge Fund for $2,236.00 to the said Motor Power Equipment Co. on the 10th day of August, 1930.

Commissioner Ole Bergman seconded the motion and the same being put received a majority of the votes of the members of the County Board and was duly carried and was by the Chairman then presiding so declared.

Commissioner Ole Torgerson offered the following resolution in writing and moved its adoption:

Be it resolved that the bid of J. D. Adams Co. for one No. 14 leaning wheel grader with 14-ft. blade and one No. 61 Maintainer with front truck F. O. B. Warren, Minn., for $3,654.07, be accepted and the County Engineer is authorized to sign an order for the same. The County Auditor is directed to issue a warrant on the County Aid Road Fund for $2,874.00 and one warrant on the County Road and Bridge Fund for $780.07 to said J. D. Adams Co. on the 10th day of August, 1930.

Commissioner A. S. Rokke seconded the motion and the same being put received a majority of the votes of the members of the County Board and was duly carried and was by the Chairman then presiding so declared.

Commissioner A. C. McMillin offered the following resolution in writing and moved its adoption:

Be it resolved that the bids for culverts be rejected.

Be it further resolved, that bids for bridge planks, snow fence, steel posts, and cutting edges be kept open until next meeting of Board.

Commissioner A. S. Rokke seconded the motion and the same being put received a majority of the votes of the members of the County Board and was duly carried and was by the Chairman then presiding so declared.

Commissioner A. S. Rokke offered the following resolution in writing and moved its adoption:

Be it resolved, that Summary Statements, Filing No. 4 and 5 for expenditures of the County Highway Department be hereby approved and the Superintendent of Highways is hereby authorized to issue time checks in payment thereof in the following amounts:

Maintenance	$ 62.80
Snow Plowing	730.76

Commissioner A. C. McMillin seconded the motion and the same being put received a majority of the votes of the members of the County Board and was duly carried and was by the Chairman then presiding so declared.

Commissioner A. C. McMillin offered the following resolution in writing and moved its adoption:

That Twelve miles of road on County Line between Marshall and Beltrami counties known as County Aid Road No. 14 be constructed out of the gas tax fund, and we hereby request an additional allowance of $20,000.00 to said counties jointly for that purpose.

Commissioner A. S. Rokke seconded the motion and the same being put received a majority of the votes of the members of the County Board and was duly carried and was by the Chairman then presiding so declared.

On motion the following bills were audited and allowed as follows:

On motion adjourned to April 8th, 1930, at 10 o'clock A. M.

A. N. LODOEN,
Chairman County Board,
Marshall Co. Minn.

Attest:
A. G. LUNDGREN,
County Auditor.
(Auditor's Seal)

"Sir," said the haughty lady who was holding up traffic. "I never hold a conversation with a man to whom I have not properly been introduced."

"That's all right, madame," replied the traffic cop, as he jotted down her number, "you meet me in the police court tomorrow morning at 10 o'clock and the judge will attend to that little formality."—Brooklyn Eagle.

A colored man named Sam had worked for his boss about five years and in that time he had just about run things. His good friend Ben said to him one day:

"Now, Sam, you have worked up there and made your boss rich. You ought to ask for more money or else you quit. You just go up there and tell him: 'Look here, boss, you pay me more—or else—'."

Sam tried his friend's advice while sweeping the next morning. He began—"Say, boss, you'll have to gib me mo' money fo' dis job."

"Well, Sam, I'll see about it," replied the boss.

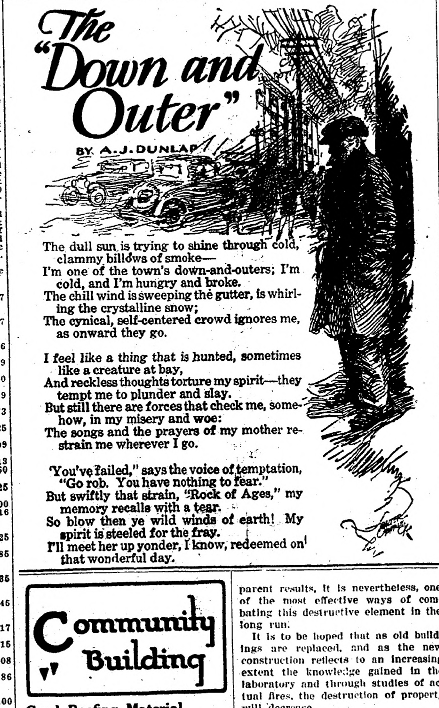
"See about nothin'; pay mo' or else."

"Pay more or else? Else what?" The boss's eyes flashed. His tone was sharp.

Sam's eyes blinked as he detected his boss's anger, and quietly he replied, "—else I wuck fo' de same money."

The "Down and Outer"

BY A. J. DUNLAP



The dull sun is trying to shine through cold, clammy billows of smoke—
I'm one of the town's down-and-outers; I'm cold, and I'm hungry and broke.
The chill wind is sweeping the gutter, is whirling the crystalline snow;
The cynical, self-centered crowd ignores me,
as onward they go.

I feel like a thing that is hunted, sometimes like a creature at bay,
And reckless thoughts torture my spirit—they tempt me to plunder and slay.
But still there are forces that check me, somehow, in my misery and woe:
The songs and the prayers of my mother restrain me wherever I go.

"You've failed," says the voice of temptation,
"Go rob. You have nothing to fear."
But swiftly that strain, "Rock of Ages," my memory recalls with a tear.
So blow then ye wild winds of earth! My spirit is steeled for the fray.
I'll meet her up yonder, I know, redeemed on that wonderful day.

Community Building

Good Roofing Material Less Costly Than Poor

It is only natural for you to want your home to look beautiful. You want it to be the best looking house that money will buy. Even if it be a small bungalow, your pride demands that it should look well. You don't want to feel ashamed of it and you don't want it to look shabby after a year or two.

The roof usually has the largest and most prominent surface in the building, and therefore its color should strike the dominating note, says a writer in the Chicago Post. A roof of dull black or uninteresting gray gives a shabby appearance and destroys a beautiful effect that might otherwise be produced in harmony with properly designed walls and architectural ornaments.

The roof is the point where so many otherwise good looking and well built houses fail. So often the home builder cuts the corners on his roof, thinking that he will save money. In the end he usually finds his saving to be costly.

He ruins the beauty of his home through the use of roofing material which is flat and uninteresting, which lacks distinction and which soon loses its original color and freshness. Incidentally, it might be mentioned that he soon finds that the cost of repairing and replacing this roof costs more than a roof of beauty and permanence would have cost him in the first place. He has not only sacrificed beauty but has spent more money in doing so. This thing has happened time and again.

Good Business Reasons for Beautiful Factory

The successful factories of the future will not be a sprawling mass of unsightly brick and metal, but, for good business reasons, will tend toward the esthetic, according to Frank D. Tomson of Lincoln, Neb., who spoke before the twenty-first semiannual meeting of the American Railway Development association, at Chicago.

"Nice looking factories, especially those with parks and beautiful grounds, will be the rule for the future," he said.

"In building an architecturally beautiful factory the builder helps develop the property near his location, brings other business sites to the place and establishes a small commercial city. In the end he will benefit by his thoughtfulness for the beauty of his city."

Lessening Fire Losses

One of the most important ways in which our tremendous annual fire loss (which now exceeds 500 million dollars) can be reduced is through better building construction, says S. H. Ingber, chief of the fire resistance section of the bureau of standards, Department of Commerce. While this method of reducing fire losses necessarily takes some time in yielding apparent results, it is nevertheless, one of the most effective ways of combating this destructive element in the long run.

It is to be hoped that as old buildings are replaced, and as the new construction reflects to an increasing extent the knowledge gained in the laboratory and through studies of actual fires, the destruction of property will decrease.

Would Extend Zoning Limits

All land lying within five miles of the corporate limits of a municipality would be included in that municipality's jurisdiction for the purpose of establishing proper control over subdivision platting, according to the preliminary edition of the proposed standard city planning enabling act, which has just been issued by the United States Department of Commerce. The preliminary edition has been issued in order that the act may receive the criticism of associations and individuals familiar with city planning problems before its final form has been determined upon.

Color Combinations

Besides the snow white and gray cement stuccos there is a wide range of colored stuccos requiring neither finishing nor recoating, and affording you an opportunity for the most artistic color backgrounds in stucco finish. You may have a solid color, relieved, perhaps, by a contrasting roof or trimmings. Also most charming combinations of colors may be worked out, permitting the widest individual expression.

A Nail in Time

The want of a nail on the exterior of a house may lead to serious consequences. A shingle gets out of place, or a clapboard or siding warps and springs up at one end. The result is that the next rain drives in its moisture and starts rot on the inside wood.

Reveals Cause of Leaks

Most of the leaks which develop in roofs are due to faulty construction or the corrosion of the metal used in flashing. The roofing material itself is not very often to blame.

Good Home Worth Cost

A good home is worth all you pay for it, in time and effort and money.

Dwarf Peas Best

Dwarf varieties of peas are best for all purposes, as they mature quickly and require no trellis or support. By falling over as they grow top heavy they help to conserve the moisture. Early Alaska is best for very earliest planting. They are almost all ready for picking at one time and by removing the stripped vines, another crop of vegetables can be grown on the ground. Little Marvel is excellent for the second planting. It is a very heavy producer of large peas of superior quality.

Drainage System Is Subject of Bulletin

Wet Soil Is Cold and Very Difficult to Cultivate.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

The drainage of wet spots in cultivated fields is generally the most profitable type of drainage a farmer can employ, since it increases crop yields and also permits him to "square up" the fields so the land can be cultivated with the minimum of time and labor.

Farmers' Bulletin 1606-F, "Farm Drainage," just issued by the United States Department of Agriculture, gives practical information for farmers who have fields requiring drainage. The bulletin points out that a wet soil is cold, lacks beneficial bacteria, is difficult to cultivate and does not provide proper conditions for the growth and development of roots, all of which results in reduced yields.

Sometimes fields can be satisfactorily drained by open ditches but usually it is advisable to construct underdrains, the bulletin says. The first essential of a tile drainage system is a suitable outlet without which the system will be a failure no matter how well constructed. Having provided an outlet the next step is to locate the drains so that they will serve all portions of the field to be drained at a minimum expense.

The depth and spacing of drains, the size of tile required, the construction of the drains, and the maintenance of drains, are all subjects of great importance to the farmer who desires to drain his farm efficiently. These subjects are discussed in detail in the bulletin, a copy of which may be obtained by writing to the office of information, United States Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C.

Use Fertilizer on Corn to Increase the Yield

Five good reasons for using commercial fertilizer on corn have been advanced by C. J. Chapman, soils specialist at the University of Wisconsin.

It seems that small applications of the fertilizer start the crop off quickly, get it ahead of the weeds, advance maturity, improve quality and increase yields.

Commercial fertilizers cannot be applied in sufficient amounts to furnish enough of the necessary elements to produce a crop of corn, but an application of 100 to 200 pounds of fertilizer per acre has proved to be a profitable investment on Wisconsin farms. It furnishes available food for the young growing plant just at the time it needs it most, and yields are often increased solely because corn got a good, early start.

The applying of the fertilizer is more important than is commonly thought, said the university specialist. The seeds should never come in direct contact with the fertilizer. It is best that the fertilizer be delivered in a space about two inches wide and six inches long above the seeds.

Profit in Ground Feed for Different Animals

While there may be some disagreement as to the value of ground feed for live stock, still most feeders have found that it pays. In general, a safe rule is to grind grain of all kinds for dairy cattle and grind all the hard grains for other live stock.

Two types of mills are available to farmers—the burr mill and the hammer mill. The burr mill is the older type and consists of circular plates working against each other to grind the materials. The hammer mill has a number of roughly mounted "hammers" on a rapidly rotating shaft and when the feed is dropped against these hammers it is "beat" to pieces.

Any farmer who has a fair-sized gas engine or a tractor, has very convenient and economical power for operating feed grinders and should use it for this purpose.

Winter Use of Spreader Is Found Advantageous

Many a farmer has more time to take care of odd jobs during the winter time than at any other season of the year. The wise farmer will use his spare time advantageously and one way of doing it is to get out into the fields all the manure around the stables. Treating the land to a wide and even layer of manure or well-rotted straw is a mighty beneficial matter. The fertility of the fields will be increased and the reward will come in greater crop yields.

Of course, a manure spreader is the most convenient implement to use in this work. The spreader can be kept near the barn and the manure pitched into it with forks or dumped from the carriers. It is an easy matter to hitch the horses or the tractor to the spreader, haul it out to the field and get rid of the load in record time.

Testing Seed Is Important Task

Ordinary Unglazed Newspaper Cut Into Strips Is Found Useful.

Recent experiments at University farm with newspaper testers have developed speedy and cheap methods of testing seed, particularly seed corn.

Use Wet Paper.

"Ordinary unglazed newspaper may be torn or cut into strips about 8 inches wide and 12 to 14 inches long," says H. K. Wilson, assistant agronomist of the Minnesota experiment station. "About six sheets of paper should be thoroughly soaked in water by kneading it into a wet roll. It is important that all sheets be wet. The strip of soaked paper is spread on a flat surface and kernels of corn to be tested distributed in the same manner employed in making a rag doll. About 50 kernels can be placed in each doll. Next, another strip of several thicknesses of soaked newspaper is placed on top of the corn, the edges of the paper are crimped together and then rolled into a compact doll. The ends should be tied loosely and the roll placed in a two-quart fruit jar.

"This jar does not require a lid but should be turned upside down and set in a warm place. A small nail placed under one edge will permit air circulation. It is unnecessary to give any further attention to the test until the results are taken one week later.

Carefully Tested Plan.

"This plan was carefully compared with the plan of placing a lid on the jar and punching a hole in it for air, which has been recommended in some quarters, and gave 9 per cent higher germination and much more vigorous seedlings."

Manure and Flies Are Big Menace to Health

It is a well-known fact that flies breed in manure and that they are not only a nuisance but also a menace to the health of both man and beast. It is equally well known that if manure is left lying in the barnyard till the corn is laid by a very large percentage of its fertility will be lost through fermentation and leaching, says the Iowa Homestead. If the bulk of the manure accumulated during the winter months can be hauled out before spring work begins there will be a chance of killing two birds with one shot—of reducing the fly nuisance and of saving valuable elements of fertility that are so much needed by our soils.

Let us get busy with the manure spreaders as soon as possible. If there is no better place for the manure than the pasture it may be used to advantage to increase its live stock carrying capacity.

Immature Grasses High in Much Needed Protein

Some tests which have been run on the feeding value of immature grasses by the Wisconsin department of agriculture indicate that many people have failed to appreciate the relatively high percentage of protein which they contained. Some samples of the first clippings of timothy and clover which were analyzed showed as high as 20 per cent of protein on the basis of dry weight. Samples of immature June grass ran equally as high, while a sample of immature rye was found to have 24 per cent of protein. Mature timothy hay has only about 6 per cent of protein and rye straw would have but little protein when mature.

Such figures as these would indicate that when grain is fed to cows on pasture during the spring and early summer, such feed would not need to be as high in protein as is sometimes considered necessary.

Agricultural Notes

Muddy water indicates wasted means.

* * *

Good land is constantly increasing in value.

* * *

Keep your soil and your soil will keep you.

* * *

Cod liver oil should not be fed to broilers the last two weeks before marketing. It taints the flesh with the odor of the oil.

* * *

When sweet clover is being seeded either alone, with some grain crop, or with a mixture of grass seed, it is essential that the seed be inoculated.

* * *

A tractor that is idle in winter makes its owner no money. On most well-managed farms there are winter jobs to do, such as sawing wood, grinding feed, baling hay, building, terraces, etc.

FINANCIAL STATEMENT

—of—

MARSHALL COUNTY
STATE OF MINNESOTA

For the Fiscal Year Beginning January 1, 1929 and Ending December 31, 1929.

Office of County Auditor,
MARSHALL COUNTY, MINNESOTA
Warren, Minnesota, December, 31st, 1929.

To the Honorable Board of County Commissioners,
Marshall County, Minnesota.

Gentlemen:

I herewith submit to you a statement of the receipts and expenditures of the County during the year 1929, also an itemized account of the warrants issued upon the County Treasurer during the said fiscal year, also a summary of the accounts collected for and turned over to each of the school districts, townships, city and villages, also a statement of the financial condition of Marshall County, at the close of the past and beginning of the present year, including all debts and liabilities and the assets and means to discharge the same.

Respectfully submitted,

A. G. Lundgren
County Auditor.

Census Taker Will Ask 24 Questions When He Arrives

They Will Be Official Secrets, However, and Snoopers Will Not See Them

Uncle Sam will begin to count his nephews and nieces on the first of April, 1930, and this year he is going to find out a lot more about them than has been known before.

Some time during the month of April an enumerator of the United States Census Bureau will call at every dwelling in the nation and ask the head of the family 24 questions. Some of them might be considered impertinent if asked by a stranger, or even by a neighbor, but the census enumerators are under oath not to disclose any facts learned by them except in their official reports. And those reports are not open anywhere to public inspection. Like the figures in your income tax return, they are official secrets which prying gossips have no access to. Uncle Sam is concerned, for census purposes only, with totals and averages and not at all with individuals. But a clear picture of the people of the United States as a whole can be obtained only by getting the facts about each individual inhabitant to start with.

For example, one of the things which it is important to know besides the number of persons in the United States, is the average age of our people. Is it higher or lower than it was when the last census was taken, ten years ago, and how much? This average age has been increasing steadily. But if the census of 1930 should show a decline in the average age, it would be a danger signal, a warning to speed up public health measures, a call to investigate the cause and apply all of the resources of sanitary science towards improving and guarding the general health.

Who Heads Family?

So don't think it is impertinence when the census-taker asks your age. Uncle Sam wants to know, not your individual age but the average of all the people.

Another question the enumerators will ask is "Who is the head of the family?" That doesn't mean what it sounds like. Uncle Sam isn't interested as to whether the wife wears the breeches or not, but does want to know how many men are dependent upon the earnings of their children, how many women are self-supporting. The head of the family, from the census point of view, is the one who earns the money.

Whether you live on a farm or in a town, whether you are white, black, red or yellow, able to read and write, where you were born and where your parents were born, when you came to America if you are an immigrant, what your native language was and whether you can speak English are questions the reasons for which are clear enough. On the totals compiled from these answers depends, among other things, the number of persons from your native country who can be admitted to the United States in the next ten years.

Everybody who is employed will be asked to give his trade or occupation and the particular industry in which he or she works, or if working on his account or as an employer, to say so. But a question on that line this year will be: "Are you employed now?" That is on the first of April. There will be for the first time an accurate record of unemployment, figures on which heretofore have been largely estimates.

How Many Radio Sets?

Another new question will be whether you own your home. In a general way the proportion of home-owners has been estimated in the past, but nobody has ever had exact figures. The figures have a decided bearing on the important subject of our national prosperity. And if you do not own your own home, the census man will ask you how much rent you pay. That is another useful index of the size of the national bankroll. Taking the two together the government will be able to tell us whether home ownership is on the increase, whether there is a demand for more individual owned dwellings and those facts have a bearing on the lumber industry and the production of all other building supplies, as well as on the market for all sorts of household equipment and furnishings.

Another new census question is whether you own a radio set. Nothing could better illustrate the speed with which new inventions take hold once they strike the public fancy. Ten years ago, there wasn't a radio set in the world except experimental ones; there was no such thing as broadcasting; nobody but a few experts knew the difference between a heterodyne and a screen-grid, if any. Now look at the blamed thing! There are so many receiving sets that Uncle Sam is going to count 'em to find out how many of his family he can talk to at once.

For the first time, the census taker will ask how old you were at your first marriage. The information will be more important ten years from now than it is now, because the second set of answers to it, in 1940, will disclose whether the average age of marriage is getting older or younger. Our grandparents married in their teens, as a rule; today 25 is nearer the average age, in all probability. Will the young folks of the next ten years continue to postpone marriage or will they revert to the youthful marriages of their ancestors?

Will List Service Men

You will be asked whether you have attended school or college since last September. The figures for education have been climbing steadily ever since the first census was taken. Beyond question they are still climbing, but how fast?

And as a final question every one of Uncle Sam's nephews will be asked whether he has served as a soldier, sailor or marine in any war in which his country was involved. We will know for the first time just how many veterans of each war are still living. And that will help to estimate future demands on tax payers for pensions.

The census is the oldest of all our federal bureaus, as old as congress and the presidential office and the judiciary, for it was set up in the constitution itself, which requires that the inhabitants be counted every ten years. The original purpose was to find out how many lived in each state in order to apportion members of congress among the states. That is still one of the purposes, though congress itself has been dilatory in reapportioning its members in proportion to population.

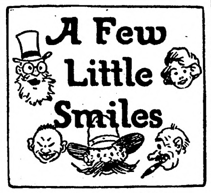
The first census, taken in 1790, showed fewer than four million inhabitants in the new nation; 3,929,214 to be exact. We passed the 25 million mark between 1850 and 1860; by 1880 we had almost exactly 50 million, and 40 years later, in 1920, we had doubled that figure with 105,710,620 persons living in Continental United States. The Census Bureau experts have made estimates from year to year of the increase since that time, and give it as their belief that enumeration of 1930 will show between 121 and 122 million nephews and nieces of Uncle Sam.

Alsike Grows on Sour Land

It is possible to grow good legume hay and good pasture on land that is too "sour" for red clover by planting alsike clover, usually in mixtures with timothy or other grasses. Alsike clover will endure overflow that would kill most crops, and has been known to grow a year in water-soaked and water-covered soil and make a heavy growth. Mixed with red clover on uplands, alsike clover insures a stand on spots where red clover will not catch.

Crop rotation is both a preventive and a control measure for plant diseases that are caused by nemas, or nematodes. If a nemic disease contaminates a soil, through infested seeds, nursery stock, implements, or the like, crop rotation will prevent or at any rate hinder its establishment. If the pest is already established, crop rotation is one of the best means by which soil can be cleaned. It is absolutely necessary to keep out the weeds if good results are to be expected through crop rotation.

A Few Little Smiles



EASILY EXPLAINED

Dear Old Lady—You say you were the only survivor of all the twelve ship-wrecked sailors?

Old Salt—Yessum.

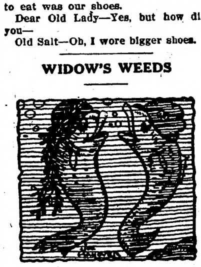
Dear Old Lady—How was it you lived when all the rest died?

Old Salt—Well, you see all we had to eat was our shoes.

Dear Old Lady—Yes, but how did you—

Old Salt—Oh, I wore bigger shoes.

WIDOW'S WEEDS



Miss Perch—How nice of you to trim your hat with widow's weeds in memory of your dear husband.

Mrs. Trout (a widow)—And so inexpensive, too. It's seaweed!

Waiting for a Ride

The gangster's time slips on its way,
With care he must employ it.
He grabs a fortune in a day,
But can't live to enjoy it.

No Quarrel Possible

"Do you ever quarrel with your wife?"

"Never," answered Mr. Meekton. "My parents thoroughly impressed me with the impropriety of interrupting a lady when she is talking."—Washington Star.

Issue Undecided

"Why didn't you go to the help of the defendant?" asked the examining counsel. "You saw that the two men were fighting."

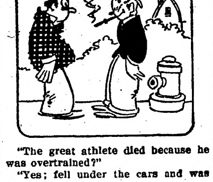
"Yes," said the witness, "but I had no means then of telling which one was going to be the defendant."

Holding Them in Line

"However do you manage to hold your constituents in line?"

"By means of the social instinct," answered Senator Sorghum. "For some mysterious reason everybody likes to shake hands."—Washington Star.

OVERTRAINED



"The great athlete died because he was overtrained?"

"Yes; fell under the cars and was cut in half."

Learning to Shoot

There, little boy king,
Don't you cry;
You'll be a gunman
Bye and bye!

Just as Reasonable

"Six feet in his boots!" exclaimed Mrs. Flatt.

"Yes," said Mr. Flatt.

"Nonsense! Why, they might as well tell me that the man had six heads in his hat!"

Rather Worse

"I understand your wife locked you out of the house the other night."

"No such luck," answered Mr. Meekton. "She locked me in."—Washington Star.

Wonderful!

Sherlock—Aha! This letter was written by a radical communist.

Watson—How do you deduce that?

Sherlock—He scrupulously avoids the use of capital letters.

Ingenious Idea

Hat-Shop Assistant—What size of hat does your husband take, madam?

Customer—I'm not sure of the size, but try them on this melon. His hats fit it exactly.—Humorist.

Logical Solution

Professor—So the ship hugged the shore? And where was the shore?

Student—I suppose it was in the hold of the vessel.

Would Come in Handy

CHOOSING LAUNDRY TUBS

Every laundress should, if possible, have three tubs, as this makes for the greatest economy of time.

Where you cannot have stationary tubs installed, portable galvanized iron tubs are excellent to use, as they give long service, are light to handle, and do not rust. That is, they will not rust as long as you are careful that none of the galvanized coating is worn or scraped off. But galvanized tubs do not hold the wringer unless fitted with wooden cleats and clamped to the washbench. Some of the heavier tubs are provided with an attachment for holding the wringer.

Wooden tubs are practically things of the past, as they are clumsy and heavy to handle and hard to care for. They must be kept damp else they will shrink and leak, and yet water must not be allowed to stand in them, as the best of wood will warp and split under such conditions. The practice usually is to keep wooden tubs stored in a cellar where moisture is more or less constant; or even to keep a wet sponge in the tub to prevent drying. And then you have to remember that constant moisture is apt to attract roaches.

Fiber tubs are very light, easy to handle and to keep clean, but if you get a good quality they are more expensive than the other kinds. Fiber tubs are made out of wood pulp, molded into shape and finished with a high luster, and as they are made in one piece, there is no danger of their leaking or falling apart.

Of course tubs come in many sizes. The ordinary family laundry tub should hold from 12 to 15 gallons, as it will then be large enough to work without splashing.

The height at which tubs are placed is most important. The top of the tub should come just to the end of the hip. A convenient height for a woman five feet six inches is to place the tubs so that the bottoms are about 22 inches from the floor. A good rule then is to raise the tubs one-half an inch from the floor for each additional inch in your height. Of course these ratios are only approximate, as habit, length of your arm and whether you are short or long-waisted are all factors to be considered.

Zez Confrey Mixes Salads and Songs

Zez Confrey.

Zez Confrey, famous composer of the musical classic, "The Kitten on the Keys," is hailed by his friends as the most versatile of America's popular song composers. Those who know him say he can mix a salad or a song oddity with equal success, which is saying considerable since his portrayal of the delightful pranks of a certain young feline frisking over the ivories has been recognized as the model of American syncopation.

But Mr. Confrey has other "firsts" in his repertoire, his acquaintances declare. Country bred, he is a judge of horse flesh, and also knows a good cigar.

The simple life is Mr. Confrey's idea of happiness. Every so often Manhattan gets too crowded for him and he boards a train for the country and the companionship of a certain murmuring brook. Inevitably he comes back with one of the merry tunes for which he is noted.

A bachelor, Zez keeps open house for his friends. If he invites a few of the boys over for a midnight supper, he does the cooking himself. Invitations to his lively little dinners are sought after. There are two dishes to which Mr. Confrey is partial. So are his friends. His recipes for the two follow:

Royal Eggs With Mushroom Sauce.

12 eggs
Salt
Pepper
1-3 pound mushrooms
1 slice pimento
2 tbsp. butter
12 slices toast

1½ cup evaporated milk diluted with
1¼ cup meat stock (This may be prepared from bouillon cubes)
2 tbsp. flour
Parsley

Saute the mushrooms in two tbsp. butter, taking care not to burn; make a white sauce of two tbsp. butter, flour, evaporated milk and meat stock. Cook five minutes. Add the cooked mushrooms and chopped pimento. Break eggs and drop into hot fat, being careful to keep egg in a globular mass. Just as soon as they are a golden brown lift out and drain. Place an egg on each piece of toast. Allow two pieces for each serving. Pour over all the mushroom sauce and garnish with parsley.

Pineapple-Cheese Salad.

10 slices pineapple
1 cup cream cheese
¼ cup chopped nuts
2 tbsp. evaporated milk

Crisp lettuce leaves
1 tbsp. pineapple juice
1 tsp. sugar
Green and red mangoes
Creamy salad dressing

Combine the cheese, nuts, evaporated milk, pineapple juice and sugar, and blend into a smooth mass. Cut pineapple circles in half. Spread cheese mixture on a slice of pineapple and press the other half circle of pineapple on top of cheese as one would a slice of bread in making a sandwich. Cut diamonds or triangles from green and red mangoes and press into the edge of the cheese mixture between the pineapple. Lay two of the prepared pieces of pineapple on a crisp lettuce leaf. Serve with creamy salad dressing. This serves five.

Fool-Proof Place for All Poisons

Garden and Domestic Insecticides Should Be Securely Locked Up.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

"Poisons such as garden and domestic insecticides, today almost a household necessity, should be securely locked up or carefully stored beyond the reach of children," says Dr. P. B. Dunbar, assistant chief of the food, drug, and insecticide administration, United States Department of Agriculture.

"A package of poison on the pantry shelf is as dangerous as a loaded gun. Some one comes along who doesn't know the package contains poison—that the gun is loaded—and the result is injury or even death. Like precautions are essential in food stores, restaurants, and food factories."

Keep Poison Locked Up.

This warning to housewives to keep poison locked away is made by the food, drug, and insecticide administration following a recent case of accidental poisoning in which holiday fruit cakes were the "loaded guns." Nine cakes, baked by a woman living near Washington, D. C., were sold to neighbors and friends, and one to an unknown house-to-house sales agent. The first to eat of one of the poisoned cakes was a doctor who, recognizing the symptoms of poisoning, called on the administration to analyze the cake.

Chemists soon determined that the sample contained arsenic poison, and an inspector was dispatched to round up the cakes. Eight were readily located and recovered from neighbors of the cake baker, but the ninth, the inspector learned, had been shipped to Canada. The Canadian family was finally reached and warned of the danger by long distance telephone. Fortunately the package had not been opened. Quick work on the part of the administration officials, no doubt, prevented serious illness and possibly death in nine homes.

Arsenic Was Found.

Samples of the different food materials in the home where the cakes were baked were then analyzed and arsenic was found in the flour. The housewife explained that an insecticide had been bought a few years previous, some of which might have been around where the children could get at it. It was the opinion of the inspector that the children had mistaken the calcium arsenate for flour and put it in the flour sack.

Cases of this kind happen every year and some less promptly handled have resulted in much illness and some deaths. The administration believes that many such accidents could be avoided if housewives had a fool-proof place in which to lock all poisons, including insecticides and polishes to prevent their getting into food.

Proper Mulch for Crops of Considerable Value

The process of mulching, though not much practiced, is known to have considerable value in dry seasons. One of the noticeable results is the saving of moisture which enables the roots to get their nourishment more readily from the soil. Tests that have recently been made indicate that heat is also retained by a mulch layer of dark color which takes in the sun's rays better than a light dusty surface. Growers of sugar cane in Hawaii have been using a paper mulch which keeps down weeds, while a California strawberry grower found that he was able to get 30 per cent more fruit by this method.

Agricultural Notes

Pick blossoms from new strawberries.

* * *

Plant an annual forage crop (say oats and peas) for late summer pasture.

* * *

Burned and hydrated lime acts quickly and may be put on the soil at seeding time for clover.

* * *

As soon as the bees have filled and capped the combs in the brood frames, put on the queen excluding board.

* * *

Shear sheep before hot weather makes the animals uncomfortable. But not too soon—about the time you take off your heavies.

* * *

Clean yards and buildings will go a long ways toward preventing live stock and poultry diseases.

* * *

Ordinarily one ton of burnt lime is used to lime an acre and this amount gives about same results as two tons of ground limestone.

* * *

Clay soil needs the constant addition of vegetable matter spaded into it to improve its quality and make it break apart more readily.

* * *

To get rid of mustard not only must all the mustard plants be killed and prevented from producing seed but the seeds in the soil must be destroyed also.

* * *

Kerosene and lard mixed in the proportion of one-half pint of kerosene to a pound of lard or any of the recommended stock dips can be used to control cattle lice. The treatment must be repeated [illegible] weeks.

THE DAIRY

OVERFEEDING IS CAUSE OF TROUBLE

Calf Often Given Too Much Milk or Alfalfa Hay.

Overfeeding of skim milk and alfalfa hay, or filth in pens, mangers and feed buckets are the causes for most calf troubles, says E. A. Hanson, dairy extension specialist, University Farm, St. Paul. When scours appear, at once reduce the amount of milk and grain fed, advises Mr. Hanson, as well as changing to timothy hay, if alfalfa or clover is being fed. Pails and utensils for calf feeding should always be washed each day and placed in the sunlight.

Newborn calves should be allowed to have the first, or colostrum milk from their dams, as this is an aid to the digestive system. Whole milk should be fed for the first three or four weeks. After this, the change from whole milk to skim milk may be made by adding one pound of skim milk and taking away one pound of whole milk daily until all skim milk is being fed. Healthy, vigorous calves can take one pound of skim milk for each 10 pounds of live weight until they are consuming 16 pounds daily. After that, nothing is gained by the feeding of additional quantities, according to Mr. Hanson.

When eight or ten days old, calves will begin to nibble hay and should be given some clean, bright clover and timothy hay. Alfalfa is excellent for older calves, but frequently causes scours in young animals and therefore should be fed sparingly. Calves should be encouraged to eat grain early, as this will supply some of the food materials, such as fat, which are lacking in skim milk. A good feed mixture may be composed of 30 pounds ground oats, 30 pounds ground corn, 30 pounds bran, and 10 pounds linseed oilmeal. Calves under five months of age may be fed as much of this mixture as they will clean up twice a day. Older calves should be limited to 6 pounds or less, depending on their age and growth.

Record-Making Cows Are Now Milked by Machines

The prejudice which still exists against the milking-machine among some dairymen is entirely unjustified, says a dairy expert in the Farm Journal. Where better results are not obtained than by hand-milking the explanation usually is not that the machine is at fault but that its user is careless in cleaning and caring for it, he observes.

Positive proof of the efficiency of the machine is offered by recent world records set by two Holstein cows. One of the cows, a Holstein owned by John G. Ellis, Lee, Mass., has made three world's records by the mechanical-milker route. Her latest record is 701 pounds of fat in 305 days.

For six years Ellis has been doing machine milking, and in the past five years his cows have made 13 world's records. He is producing grade A milk for the New York market.

The other record cow is a Holstein owned by Charles Hughes & Son, Neenah, Wis. As a four-year old, she produced 642 pounds of fat, 20,114 pounds of milk, in 365 days. All this milk was drawn by a mechanical milker, twice-a-day milking.

Dairy Facts

A full dinner pail for the dairy cow means a full milk pail for the dairyman.

* * *

Cows like salt. Feed one pound of salt to every 100 pounds of grain mixture.

* * *

It takes all winter for a good cow to recover from the effects of a poor pasture and no grain.

* * *

Cows respond to good treatment, regularly of milking, careful management, and liberal feeding.

* * *

Children and young calves may contract bovine tuberculosis by drinking the milk from tuberculosis cows.

* * *

The tubercular cow should be removed from the milk supply. Safety cannot always be guaranteed by pasteurization.

* * *

Cows love water. Next to air, water is the cheapest food known for health. Water also aids digestion, manufactures blood, and is used to secrete milk.

* * *

Cool the cream after skimming and keep it cool by setting the can in cold water, changed three times daily during summer. Stir the cream at least twice a day and don't mix warm cream with cold cream.

* * *

Silage will be plentiful on most farms although the quality may be poor in many cases, the specialists believe. This is due to the early frosts and the wet weather during the silo-filling season which caused a low quality of corn and some mold in the silage.

Mild Winters Not Right for Trees

Definite Amount of Severe Weather Required for Needed Changes.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Severe winters in the North usually mean short crops, but with peaches in Georgia and apples southward from Virginia, the rule works just the other way. This is because temperate-zone fruit trees require a definite amount of cold weather during which certain changes are carried on which prepare them for growth in the spring. This period of "rest," which is so definitely required for many trees and plants, is really therefore a period of slight but important changes in the trees.

Growth Delayed in Spring.

Dr. M. B. Waite, of the United States Department of Agriculture, observed many years ago, that our northern fruits, such as the peach, when cultivated too far south in Georgia, frequently exhibit symptoms of delayed growth in the spring, attributable to lack of sufficient resting period. Dr. Lee M. Hutchins, of the same department, has recently observed the same phenomena and points out that as a rule, in about one year in five, the mild winters of Georgia do not give peach trees the required amount of resting period, and the result is what peach growers call "prolonged dormancy." When this happens, peach trees in the lower portion of the state fail to bloom at their regular time. Finally they bloom, from a week to several weeks late.

This disturbance may interfere with the setting of the fruit, and the ripening of the fruit may also be thrown off schedule and come in with the crop in other parts of the state farther north, which tends to make an overcrowded market.

Albany Is Limit.

Albany is given by Doctor Hutchins as about the southern limit for the commercial production of our standard varieties of peaches. South of this limit the trees during most winters do not get enough cold weather for maximum production. The same principle applies to apples in a zone much farther north.

Corn and Peas Favored as Home Garden Staples

High quality sweet corn can be grown in most any garden the season through, say horticulturists of the University of Minnesota. Starting with Early Dow, which is about ten days ahead of Golden Bantam, or with Pickaninny, a rather low growing, bushy type, with ears near the ground, the gardener can follow with successive plantings of the standard Bantam and have highly flavored toothsome ears for his table until early fall.

Peas, a good second for corn in the garden, should be planted as soon as the ground can be worked. Alaska and Thomas Laxton are good early varieties. Those recommended for later use are Little Marvel, a dwarf which is fairly early; Gradus and Telephone, both of which are late, and Alderman, a tall, large podded plant which also produces rather late in the season.

New Zealand spinach and chard will furnish minerals, vitamines and bulk to the diet in the form of greens all through the season, and one or the other, or both, if there is room in the garden, should be grown.

Agricultural Hints,

Kill the early weeds.

• • •

A good crop cannot be grown on an impoverished soil.

• • •

Get a wheel hoe, so the boys can take care of the garden.

• • •

Make the change gradually from dry hay to green grass.

• • •

Clover hay is two-and-a-half and alfalfa three-and-a-half times as rich in digestible protein as is timothy.

• • •

Sacked limestone can be piled in the field and covered with building paper or straw. Haul it this winter.

• • •

The use of high-grade seed potatoes would increase the returns from the potato crop of the country by many millions of dollars.

• • •

Probably the largest single item in tractor cost is depreciation, followed closely by fuel cost. An idle tractor is a poor investment.

• • •

Superphosphate is equally well adapted for use on the dropping boards of the poultry house as in the gutters of the dairy barn.

• • •

Fence posts, unless they are of cedar and oak, and cheap, should be given a preservative treatment before they are set in the ground.

• • •

Any silage remaining in the silo can be kept over for next winter with little loss by covering with roofing paper and weighting down to expel and keep out air.

• • •

Tests at the various experiment stations indicate that both wire and cloth base glass substitutes lose at least one-fourth of their efficiency in transmitting the ultra violet rays when they become dusty or dirty.

The DAIRY

WINTER FEEDING FOR DAIRY COWS

Hardest Working Animal on Farm Needs Best Ration.

The milking cow is the hardest working animal on the farm, a fact which explains the importance of good feeding for dairy cows. A cow giving 35 pounds of milk a day produces in that milk what is known as 10.4 therms of energy. To produce the same number of therms in the form of useful work, a team of two 1,500-pound horses would have to work steadily for eight hours.

As the only way a cow can obtain energy to put into her milk is through the feed she eats, her feed must be highly nutritious and fed in sufficient quantities so that her body requirements as well as her full needs for maximum milk production are met. The successful dairy farmer bases his winter feeding program on an abundance of legume roughage such as alfalfa or other legume hay, and corn silage. So that he may be sure to have these roughages available next winter he is already making his plans for a substantial acreage in alfalfa or one of the other legumes for hay this spring. An acre for each cow in milk will grow enough alfalfa hay to keep these cows well supplied with the very best dry roughage from late fall to early spring. The growing of about one acre and a half of the other legumes will be required to keep a milking cow well supplied with hay during the same period. Now is the time to plan for next winter.

In winter feeding, hay is usually fed at the rate of 1 to 1¼ pounds for each 100 pounds the cow weighs. Silage is generally fed at the rate of 2½ to 3½ pounds for each 100 pounds of the animal's weight. Grain should always be fed according to the cow's milk production. The larger breeds, such as the Ayreshire, Brown Swiss and Holstein, are fed one pound of grain to each 3½ to 4 pounds of milk produced daily. The smaller breeds, as the Guernseys and Jerseys are usually fed grain at the rate of 1 pound to each 3 pounds of milk produced daily.

Many Dairymen Overlook Water Supply in Winter

The average dairyman overlooks the water supply for his cows during the winter months, and in doing so he overlooks a nice profit and lowers the production of his cows. The dairy cow will drink 100 pounds of water daily if it is located where she can get it at least twice daily and it is not too cold. A fresh cow will drink three or four times as much as a stripper or dry cow. In cold winter weather a cow will not drink that much water if turned out but once a day and she has to walk to a pond or tank to drink. Furthermore, when a large amount of cold water is drunk in cold weather it must be raised to the body temperature of the cow, and to do this the cow burns the feed nutrients which were intended to produce milk and maintain her body.

Small Slender Silos Are Now Coming Into Style

If there was any such thing as styles in silo building, it would be appropriate to say that the slender figure in silos is coming into style. The tendency seems to be toward less diameter and more height, and if a large amount of silage is needed to build two small ones rather than one silo of great diameter.

Eight, ten and twelve-foot silos are each year becoming more common. These small structures make a silo a practical investment for herds of ten or more dairy cows, or for two or three loads of beef steers. Ten cows for example, will eat about two inches of silage per day from an eight-foot silo and about one and one-third inches from a silo ten feet in diameter.

Cow Stanchions Should Be Properly Adjusted

The stanchions should be so adjusted that the cows deposit their droppings in the gutter and not on the platform. Clean, dustless bedding should be provided daily. The flanks of the cows should be clipped to keep the hair short so that the cows may be easily cleaned with a stiff brush. Brushing should be done as often as possible. Diseased cows should be isolated from the healthy ones. A constant inspection should be maintained to locate new diseases. Every dairyman should make it a point to become acquainted with common cow ailments. Milk from diseased cattle should never be sold.

Dipping for Lice

Lice cause great annoyance to calves and may seriously retard growth if present in large numbers. They are difficult to control, but about the most satisfactory treatment is dipping or washing with a coal tar dip solution. This method cannot be used during cold weather but should be used the first warm, still spring day. In a [illegible] ten days the treatment should [illegible] to get the young lice [illegible] out in the mean-

HOW TO SAVE MONEY WHEN SHOPPING

By MRS. HARLAND H. ALLEN

(©, 1922, Harland H. Allen.)

PROBLEM OF SHRINKAGE

The question of shrinkage is an important one to the shopper. It is no little thing to lose 100 square inches out of a square yard, as sometimes happens when a flannel or other wool material returns from the tubs.

Wool materials especially present grave dangers from this source. They should always be shrunk before making up, otherwise they will not only felt and harden if laundered, but they will shrink the first time the garment is worn on a damp day, and will spot from rain.

The reason wool shrinks so badly is something like this: The fibers of wool, when seen under the microscope are composed of many little overlapping segments that are toothed and notched at the edges. When wet, these little notches open and expand, and then catch in one another and become tangled, thus causing felting and matting of the cloth. Often, even when the laundering is done as carefully as possible, the best wool garments will still shrink in daily wear just from the warmth, moisture and friction of the body. You notice this especially under the arms, where sweaters and woolen garments are pretty sure to mat and thicken.

The average wool material shrinks from three-quarters to one inch to the yard. You can judge something about goods by outside appearances. For instance, those fabrics seem to shrink most which contain curly, rather than hairlike, wool fibers; that have a carded rather than a combed yarn; and in which the yarns lie close together in the weave. Colored woolens are less apt to shrink, because of the thorough washing which precedes the dyeing, especially when they have been dyed in the cloth, instead of dyed in the wool.

Cotton goods will average one or two inches shrinkage to the yard. Some women shrink all cotton goods before making; but as this takes away some of the attractive "new look," many prefer to make their gowns larger than necessary just at first to allow for shrinkage. Linen cloth shrinks very little, though coarsely woven linen will stretch.

It is sometimes very convenient to be able to find out just how much the goods you contemplate buying will shrink. This can be computed by measuring the length and width of a sample, and then washing it with hot water and soap. First overcast the raw edges so there will be no loss of threads. Dry and iron without stretching. Measure again, and the loss gives the shrinkage.

CHOOSE CHAIRS FOR COMFORT

There are two important points that you should have in mind when purchasing every chair—the first, a vision of the position the chair is to occupy in the room; and the other, an idea of who is to sit in the chair most—whether it is to be used by a man or woman, by a regular member of the family or an occasional guest.

No doubt most buyers do have the first point in mind, but how many, do you think, give any attention to the latter?

A guest who has dropped in, all furred and hatted, for a short call will generally be much more comfortable in a straight back, rather low chair, without arms, so that she may have perfect freedom when turning from side to side to converse with the different members of the family. Hence we have "reception" chairs.

A chair bought for a man should be very different in both shape and size from a woman's. For one thing the seat should be higher and deeper, the back should be constructed differently, and altogether it should be a much more commodious piece of furniture.

Very soft commodious chairs with down cushions are generally liked by men better than women. Perhaps that is because when a woman drops down to rest for a few moments she generally likes to busy herself with some quiet craft—a bit of unfinished sewing or embroidery perhaps—and such chairs are not conducive to activity.

When sitting down to work, a chair with a broad, deep seat, and a high, almost straight back that will sustain us erect will be found to be the most comfortable.

Many people bewail the popularity of the "rocker," even contending that there is no such thing as a comfortable rocking chair, and that it only dissipates the energy and makes for "nerves."

Which brings us up to the point that every chair should be of the most substantial kind, with none too good for constant use; and that only after a chair has been selected to conform to the dimensions of the person who is to sit in it, and answered every test for comfort, can the design and style be considered.

HOW TO BUY A HAT

Some women complain that they can never find a becoming hat. If that is your trouble you had just as well make up your mind at the outset that you do not go about choosing a hat properly. Surely a sufficient number of hats are brought out each season to suit all types. There are a few simple rules for selecting a becoming hat which, carefully followed, would make the veriest flapper a past master in the art. (Usually she is. Have you noticed?)

In the first place, never buy a hat when you are "all tired out." Plan your shopping so that you get your hat first—the rest can wait. A good time to look at hats is early in the morning when you feel fresh and rested.

Never buy a hat in a hurry. Try a number on, studying them from each side, from the front, and from the back, in a triple mirror.

Always stand up and walk about with the hat on. Sometimes a hat may look very pretty while you are sitting, but when you stand you may find that you are either too tall or too short for that style of hat. Walk back and forth before a full-length mirror, observing yourself from every angle just as your friends are going to observe you when they see you coming. It is important that a hat not only look well on the head but in proportion to the rest of the figure.

Another thing to remember is that if you gain or lose weight you may have to change the shape of your hat. A shape that is becoming for a slender figure is not desirable for a stout one.

If the hat is to be worn with some particular dress or suit, be sure to have that garment on. Otherwise it is almost impossible to get just the effect one desires.

Never buy a hat merely because it looks new or interesting in the shop. Ask yourself some such questions as these: Is it becoming to my face, hair and figure? Is it suitable to wear with the clothes I have? What garments have I that require a hat? How few hats can I get along with? It makes a difference whether you are buying a hat to be worn every day to school or business, or only to make an occasional visit in your closed limousine.

GETTING SOMETHING TO GO WITH WHAT YOU HAVE

"When I am buying one new article I always try to select something that will go well with what I have on hand," says one well-dressed woman.

I call that a first-rate guide in choosing new clothes.

For instance, if you have gray furs, don't buy a brown dress, but choose black or blue or gray, so that next winter they will look well together. But if you have a brown hat, do not select a gray dress, but take a brown one.

When a woman buys at random any color she may fancy, it can readily be seen that she will require many more clothes than the woman who selects everything new to harmonize with something she already has.

Many a hat looks well with one suit, but does not go with any of the others. An evening coat may look lovely with your blue dress, but positively hideous with the pink one, so that they can never be worn together. If you know that blue and brown, for example, are your most becoming colors, you should decide which of these is going to be most popular with the fashion dictators, or best suited to your purpose, and let this be the general tone of your wardrobe, keeping all your coats, suits and gowns, at least in harmony with it. Especially can the number of outer coats be reduced in this way. And, of course, all waists made this season will then be just the thing to wear with the next new suit.

In the same way, if you can afford only one new outfit, and you decide that a tailored suit best fills your need do not spoil it by purchasing an over-elaborate hat, or shoes meant only for party wear. Or if you have found by experience that fluffy, frilly things best fulfill your purpose, do not change over to tailored clothes all at once, and expect to keep a harmonious effect.

This is one of the greatest secrets of economical dressing. If you will plan your wardrobe so that any article you buy can be worn with any of the others, you will find that you do not begin to need so many hats, gloves, shoes, furs, petticoats, parasols, and the like, as the woman who does not use such foresight in her shopping.

Shoe Man Inherits Ancient Hammer

Fenton, Ohio—O. S. Wilson, a South side shoe dealer of this village, owns a hammer with a history. Documentary evidence in Wilson's possession states that the hammer was first brought to this country from Scotland in 1700 by Jessy Justice, who used it in the construction of some of Philadelphia's early frame buildings. At Justice's death the hammer was bequeathed to his son, and descending from one generation to the next, it eventually came into its present owner's possession about one month ago. The handle, undoubtedly made from a hickory sapling, was placed in the hammer 83 years ago.

Community Building

Trees That "Make Good" on the Home Grounds

Elm and oak trees are ideal for the home grounds, not only because of their beauty and long life, but because their shade is not so dense as to kill plants and grass beneath them.

Oaks are considered to be slow growing trees, but they will grow almost as readily as the elms. The burr oak, which grows with a widespread head and rugged branches, is the finest for the yard and the pin oak for parkways. Red oaks do best in light dry soils. Oaks are not difficult to transplant if one buys nursery grown trees of the small sizes and prunes them back severely at planting time. If this is neglected the oak is quite likely to die even after it puts out leaves.

Black walnuts are fine shade trees and grow readily. They produce nuts whose merit is recognized by all good cooks and their wood is the most expensive of native woods.

The gongko bilboa or maiden hair tree, which has a leaf shaped like that of the maiden hair fern and which grows in a perfect cone, is much used for parkway planting in eastern cities. It is especially immune from insects and disease attacks.

Opinions Vary Greatly Concerning Model City

Inspired by talk about a "model" city, the question arises, What is a model city? It cannot be answered, for the reason that the answer depends on the cultural viewpoint, with reference to the word "culture," in its dictionary application to "refinement of mind, morals or taste."

To say that a city is great or opulent or beautiful conveys a meaning more or less satisfactory to every one. But a "model" city in the sense here understood raises a conflict of opinions. Your model city may, for instance, be either too puritanical for some tastes or too wicked for others.

One man's meat is another man's poison. My model city may not be your model city.

New Orleans would not suit Boston as a model city.

Washington, as a model city, may not please Wayback or Hickville.

The model city of a Washington, a Jefferson, or a Lincoln might be to others Sodom or Gomorrah.

And so it goes. What we should do is to make our city a better city, not a model.—Washington Post.

Water Supply Important

Of the thousands of privately owned water supply companies, a few hundred have been brought together in the last few years into holding companies which were able to give each individual unit up-to-date management. Able engineering brains were introduced. Improvements and extensions were scientifically planned, and, in this way, the needs of the communities were anticipated in advance, so that the growth of the communities was, in many cases, furthered instead of retarded by lack of water facilities for industries, home developments, fire protection, sanitation, street cleaning, etc. The importance to the communities of a progressive water company can scarcely be overstated because an adequate supply of pure water is the basis of a higher standard of living, greater comfort, better fire protection and industrial progress.

Wooded Setting Effective

Consider a wooded setting for your brick house wherever it is possible. Nothing is quite so effective in enhancing the charm of a richly colored common brick wall as the constant change in the play of sunshine and shadows. This is especially appealing where the color tones are varied and sharply defined.

A ray of sunshine focusing suddenly upon a single brick of unusually vivid coloring, searching it out as a branch is swayed in the breeze, endows it in a twinkling with a flash of new and startling beauty akin to the glow of a firefly in the dusk.

Unpainted Building Decays

The recent authoritative estimate that the weathering of unpainted buildings and implements costs American farmers $800,000,000 a year leads the Farm Journal to point out what is really happening to a building while the owner thinks he is saving money by delaying the needed coat of paint. It is decay, but the actual wearing away of the exposed surface that makes a ruin of the neglected building long before its time.

Brick Veneering Pays

Many old houses have sturdy frames despite the shabby and old appearance of the exterior. Given a veneer of face brick, these houses will put on an appearance of new and will give service that compares well with an entirely new home, for the brick exterior provides protection against the elements and takes on added beauty with the years.

Two Billion Remodeling

The home modernizing bureau of the National Building Industries expects that during the next 12 months [illegible] will be spent for remodeling.

Insects Change Habits of Feed

Many Bugs Have Ability to Thrive on Newly Introduced Crops.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

The unusual ability of many insects to make themselves at home wherever they happen to be carried, whether by flight or through commerce, is in a large measure responsible for the presence of so many plant pests, says the United States Department of Agriculture. Then, too, many insects have a surprising ability to survive, and even to flourish, under changed conditions brought about through cultivation of the soil and other activities of civilization. Thus, many of our well-known crop pests formerly fed on wild plants, but when the land was planted to cultivated crops the insects not only changed their diet but throve enormously on their new food.

Feed of Pests.

Chinch bugs feed on both wild and cultivated plants. They spend the winter on native grasses and come out in spring and feed on young grain crops. Grubs of June beetles eat roots of native grasses until grain crops are available. Practically all of the pests of cereal crops fed entirely on wild plants until the large fields of cultivated crops offered a better feeding place.

The Colorado potato beetle is an example of a native insect that has become "domesticated." Formerly it lived on wild nettle, a plant which grows in the foothills of the Rocky mountains. When the potato was introduced into that region the beetle promptly adopted it, and in 20 years spread to the Atlantic ocean.

California Pests.

In California there is a strain of codling moth, the well known apple pest, which has developed a liking for walnuts. Since the walnut trees are large and spraying them is difficult, this insect promises to become a serious walnut pest. The new peach moth from Japan is a serious enemy of pears in that country, and the well known European corn borer is a pest of hops and millet in Europe.

Cultivation of field crops over a long period of years produces ideal conditions for the perpetuation of insects. That is why it is necessary for the department of agriculture and the state experiment stations to continue to wage war on the pests.

Kentucky Wonder Beans Will Return Big Yield

The Kentucky wonder bean has pods which grow from eight to ten inches long that are very fleshy and tender, and when very small, are delicious cooked whole. The vines bear quite heavily, beginning early in the summer and continuing till frost. It is as good as any bean while young, but is especially desirable to shell for late fall use and also for canning or drying, says a writer in the Farmer. Early frosts do not injure the beans in the pods for cooking purposes. At this time the shells fairly pop open, each yielding a generous amount of deliciously flavored, large, dark beans.

This bean requires a pole on which to climb. One woman gardener first planted four hills in the back yard. These hills stood in the form of a square, each hill six feet apart, and the runner poles were tied together wigwam style. The vines grew luxuriantly and provided an excellent little playhouse for her two little girls. With the resulting shade provided by this overhang, the ground underneath retained much of its moisture which no doubt helped to account for the abundant yield, for the family of four had all they could use from these four hills of beans.

SAVINGS PASSBOOKS SOUGHT BY CROOKS

Use Them to Steal Money by Forged Slips — Should Be Guarded as Carefully as Cash.

Continued vigilance in safeguarding savings pass books, as well as blank and cancelled checks, against theft by crooks, who use this material in forgery operations, is urged on bank customers by James E. Baum, Deputy Manager of the American Bankers Association, in charge of its Protective Department. This department is continually vigilant in promoting means, both among bankers and the general public, to thwart the operation of bank crooks. It annually investigates hundreds of crimes against banks and is responsible for the majority of arrests among this class of criminals.

"In a large majority of cases of forgeries on checks or savings withdrawal orders investigated by the American Bankers Association, stolen blank checks or savings pass books were the forgers' chief stock in trade," Mr. Baum says. "In may instances the temptation presented through the careless handling by depositors of cancelled or blank checks or pass books so that they fell into the hands of others was the immediate stimulus for hitherto honest people to commit their first criminal offense."

Banks should educate their depositors to exert the same degree of care in handling these instruments and to avoid leaving them about unguarded as they exercise in respect to actual money because they represent money, he declares.

For dealing with the bank robbery situation, Mr. Baum recommends the use of electrical alarms actuated by any tampering with the wires or mechanism and also wider adoption of the plan of state police forces now employed in a few states, declaring that last year in seven eastern states where state police forces were maintained there were only 20 bank holdups as against 164 similar attacks perpetrated against banks in five states in the central and far west, where banks are denied the advantages of the speedy and coordinated action given by statewide police forces.

"The records of the American Bankers Association Protective Department reveal that for many years the odds in favor of state police protection have been at least 8 to 1 when measured by the experience of banks in states where efficient police protection is missing in the rural districts," he says.

"Paying the Fiddler", a comedy-drama in three acts, by Lillian Martimer, amasingly dramatizes one of the most familier phenomena in American life; the family that lives recklessly beyond its income.

The Castle family is plainly headed for disaster. The crash comes when the spoiled son of the household all but kills a child with his speeding motor car, thereby bringing about his father's physical and financial collapse.

Together with the financial situation we find interwoven two interesting love affairs between four charming characters.

What is the outcome of the Castle affair? Everyone will have an opportunity to see the problem solved at some future date.

Watch for announcements!

Walter Steinhauer is back to our school after an absence of one week due to an attack of mumps.

On Monday, March thirty-first the revised schedule of high school classes went into effect. Classes have been so arranged as to allow time for study for each subject the period preceeding class. There will be a twenty minute period for Physical Education each day, compared to the thirty minute period three days a week, which was scheduled before, the time has thus been increased ten minutes per week. We strive for greater effeciency.

The general science class has some members who have become skilled in telegraphy. Oscar Nohre has been able to receive about four words per minute.

Seventh and Eighth Grades

The eighth grade are now studying practical geometry, and are now able to measure inaccessible objects

The state board examination review has been started by the eighth grade in History and Civics.

The word "if" is a popular word in the eighth grade grammar class now because they have been memorizing the poem "If" by Kipling.

The seventh grade pupils have been learning to make and read the four general kinds of graphs.

The seventh grade pupils have completed the study of Minnesota in geography and will start the review of the sections of the United States.

Fifth and Sixth Grades

The Wyllis-Knight driven by the fifth grade spellers, won its second race Friday. The Ford, however, is competing a third time.

The fifth grade Round Table entertained the sixth grade and a few little friends Friday afternoon. The program was very much enjoyed and the lunch proved dilicious. The little friends were; Lois Hanson, Betty Lorentson and Buddy Hanson.

Clara Engebretson is back with us again. We are glad to have her back. Alice Bottem is back to our school after a five weeks absence due to illness. We hope our attendance will be better from now on.

Third and Fourth Grades

Fourth graders are making free hand maps of all the countries they have visited. These maps they are going to cut out and mount. They also made an airplane in which they are going to visit these countries.

The third and fourth graders were in their Arithmetic race Monday.

Fourth graders added their first brick to their wall in "My Weekly Reader", contest.

First and Second Grades

The second graders have started a new book and the first graders will start one sometime this week.

DEADLINE NEARS FOR CLAIMS OF VETERANS

Minnesota Legion leaders remind world war veterans and their dependents that only little time remains during which to file government compensation claims before the April 6 deadline.

Failure to file a claim in time, bars the veteran from securing future benefits. Disabled veterans or their dependents should file their claims with the nearest Legion post, with Legion state headquarters, the State Soldier Welfare Bureau, or the Veterans Bureau.

"Every veteran who has any inkling of a disability should apply now, irrespective of its nature or origin." Legion leaders warn: "It will cost nothing to file and may help in the future. Veterans are also reminded that government insurance is still available at reasonable rates."

CARL BEN EIELSON, NORTH DAKOTA HERO, BURIED AT HATTON

Impressive Ceremonies Are Witnessed by Thousands—Governor Shafer Pays Tribute to Aviator.

By H. M. ZAHL

Written especially for this newspaper and associated WNU Ready Prints

Although the last rites have been performed for Carl Ben Eielson, aviator hero of Hatton, N. D., his name and fame will live forever. It was he who blazed the way to the successful establishment of aerial transportation across the top and bottom of the world. It was Eielson who piloted Sir Hubert Wilkins from Point Barrow, Alaska, across the North Pole to Dead Man's Island, Spitzbergen, more than 2200 miles without stop, for which feat he was awarded the Distinguished Flying Cross.

Carl Ben Eielson, conqueror of the frozen north, who was overcome by those same Arctic elements while attempting to aid the ice-locked ship Nanuk in Alaska, has been laid to rest in Hatton cemetery. A hero has returned home for the last time to be honored by the people who knew and loved him.

Thousands Attend.

Thousands gathered at Hatton to witness the last rites—sealed with the volleys of a firing squad and the notes of taps which are traditional burial ceremonies for those who have served one's country.

The same snow and cold that faced him on his attempted flight to the Nanuk last November as he left Teller, Alaska, were with his body as it went to its final resting place. The blinding snow and biting cold failed to stop those who desired to attend the funeral and pay their last respects to the dead hero. Crowds began thronging into the city twenty-four hours before the funeral and continued to gather throughout the entire ceremonies.

Cars filled with visitors came from every section of the country. Fellow airmen piloted their planes from distant points that they might lay a wreath at the bier of one who gave his life in an effort to aid others. Special trains from Fargo and Grand Forks carried Legion men, army companies, and private citizens. Standing room was at a premium in the little city of Hatton for the day. For eighteen hours a steady stream of men and women viewed the Eielson trophies and casket at the funeral home.

The funeral procession from the Eielson home started shortly before 2 p. m. The Fargo American Legion band led the procession and was followed by the Legion and national colors and a color guard. The streets were lined with persons, who silently, humbly, admiringly paid tribute to the memory of the famous Arctic pioneer.

Honorary Pallbearers.

Following the colors were cars carrying Rev. O. L. Jenson, St. John's Lutheran church pastor, and G. H. Wambheim, Hatton Legion post commander, and a bugler. Members of the escort of honor which accompanied the body from Seattle served as honorary pallbearers: Adjutant General G. Angus Fraser, Bismarck; Harry Hart, Ray, state commander of the American Legion; Colonel Thomas Murphy, Minot; Colonel Ivan V. Metzger, Williston; Major Earl Sarles, Hillsboro; Captain Fred Moore, Grafton; Fred Bier, Carrington, and T. O. Kraabel, Fargo.

Next in line came the active pallbearers, all boyhood friends from Hatton, H. M. Nash, W. F. Foss, D. L. Wambheim, A. E. Foss, M. T. Langemo, and M. S. Haakenson, followed by the firing squad, Arnth Olson, Alex Karsmo, Carl Gunderson, Olaf Bye, V. T. Champeau, Almer Casella, and J. Burock, directed by Dr. J. A. Teic.

Ole Eielson, father of the dead airman, and members of the immediate family followed in the next two cars, including Oliver and Arthur, brothers; Mrs. Elmer Osking, Helen, Hannah, and Adelaine, sisters; Eileen Osking, a niece, and Almer Olaf Osking, a nephew. Twenty-eight more distant relatives in the city for funeral services, followed in the next seven automobiles.

Pat Reid Attends.

Guests of honor were driven in cars throughout the procession. In this group were Captain Pat Reid, who played such an important part in the search for the missing aviators, Mechanics William Hughes and Sam MacAuley, Olaf Swenson, owner of the Nanuk, Governor George Shafer, Dr. C. A. Lyons of the University of Minnesota, President Thomas Kane of the University of North Dakota, and Acting President J. H. Shepperd of the North Dakota Agricultural college.

Weather conditions prevented Sir Hubert Wilkins, with whom Eielson flew across the North Pole, from arriving on the day of the ceremonies. He was detained at Detroit but flew to Hatton the following day to extend his sympathies to the father and other relatives. He visited the grave and there placed a wreath, his last tribute to his friend and comrade.

As the services were carried on in the St. John's Lutheran church, thousands who were unable to gain admittance gathered in the churchyard to listen to the program through loud speakers. In the church services a number of speakers joined in their eulogy of Eielson, his work, his life in the far north, the life he lived in Hatton, and the family who gave him to the world of aviation.

Services Simple.

Complying with the wishes of the Eielson family, all of the services were as simple as possible. The pastor spoke but seven minutes. As the crowd assembled in the cemetery the American Legion band played a short series of selected numbers and the burial rites were opened with "Call to the Colors."

The firing squad, composed of men who knew Ben throughout his life, raised their rifles and fired three volleys. Short prayer was offered by Rev. A. C. Hill, state chaplain of the American Legion. The casket was lowered into the grave and taps were played.

Governor Honors Eielson.

Carl Ben Eielson will be remembered through eternity, Governor George F. Shafer declared. "The tribute paid Eielson by North Dakota and the northwest is a testimonial to the enduring character of his fame," he said.

His entire speech follows:

"It has been truly said that ours is a nation of hero-worshipers. This is not a national fault but a national virtue, for it evidences our deep and lasting reverence for those human qualities which are heroic in character and our profound appreciation of the part which heroism has, in all ages, contributed to the advancement of civilization.

"Every generation in the history of our country has produced its heroes, not many in number but high in quality. Some have been military heroes; some have been brilliant leaders in civil administration; many have been explorers and adventurers, whose daring exploits in the wilderness or upon the seas have thrilled the hearts of their countrymen and reclaimed or saved vast regions for the nation.

"The names and fame of these men of courage and genius, whose achievement reached the high tide of human endeavor, we cherish in a manner akin to worship. We clasp them affectionately to our hearts. We seek to make their fame and virtues imperishable by enshrining them in the patriotic history and traditions of our country. We set them up as models and examples for the inspiration of our children. We erect monuments to their memories that generations yet unborn may know them for what they were.

"To this small group of American heroes belongs Carl Ben Eielson. By every test of character and achievement, his name is entitled to be enrolled among America's immortal and heroic dead. Possessed of a hardy spirit of adventure, inherited from his Norse ancestors, endowed with courage and perseverance unequalled, given a brain and poise unsurpassed in quality; gifted with a sense of duty unexcelled and a skill in airmanship unmatched, he conquered the hitherto unconquerable regions of the earth; the frozen Arctic and the frigid Antarctic, and made them accessible to the needs and requirements of civilized man.

"In the course of these daring accomplishments he daily and hourly moved in the atmosphere of danger; in his brilliant flights he literally danced with death. So extremely dangerous were his daily operations in these barren and ice-covered wastes that it would, indeed, have been miraculous had he long escaped disaster.

"Of the presence of these dangers he was well aware but that circumstance never deterred nor restrained him. Where adventure beckoned he went. Where duty called he neither faltered nor hesitated, but pointed his cabin plane into the teeth of the Arctic blizzard and so flew through the portals of eternity.

"And today his native state of North Dakota claims him for her own. He returns to the land which gave him birth; to the home of his youth; to the home folks, who, in other days, gave him their full measure of friendship, admiration and love. He returns to sleep forever in this modest and humble abode, beside her who gave him life, hope, strength, and virtue.

"But the memories of Carl Ben Eielson and his heroic achievements will never die. The tribute which the people of North Dakota and the northwest today will pay him is a testimonial to the enduring character of his fame and the undying love and admiration which they bear him.

"Neither the nation nor the world will soon forget him. As long as the history of American exploration is read by mankind he will be numbered as first among those aces of aerial adventure whose daring and genius opened the way to the successful establishment of aerial transportation across the top and across the bottom of the world.

"Thus, his name will be written high on the scroll of history, and neither the change of seasons nor the march of time will dim its lustre."

Memorial Planned.

Plans are being made for the establishment of an Eielson memorial building in Hatton.

A personal letter from Governor Christianson of Minnesota was presented to Ole Eielson by Lieutenant Colonel Joseph E. Eielson, assistant adjutant general of Minnesota, who led the flight of five planes representing Minnesota at the funeral.

"Minnesota is honored to join her sister state in paying public tribute to the gallant memory of your son, the late Colonel Carl Ben Eielson," Governor Christianson's letter said. "I have asked Colonel Nelson to bring to you my personal expression of admiration for your son and of sympathy for you and the family. In this heartfelt expression, I know I am joined by all the people of Minnesota."

Thus the last chapter of the exceptional life of a great North Dakota hero was written.

Burtness Asks Medal.

Congress was asked to award the Congressional Medal of Honor posthumously to Carl Ben Eielson.

The plea was made by O. B. Burtness, representative from North Dakota, at a session of the House in Washington, D. C.

The North Dakotan related Eielson's flight across the North Pole from Point Barrow, Alaska, with Captain George Hubert Wilkins to Dead Man's island, near Spitzbergen, and numerous other flights in Alaska.

Had Other Honors.

Burtness said many awards had been given to Eielson by foreign governments for his North Pole flight and that the war department had awarded him the Distinguished Flying Cross for his World war service, but that congress had done nothing in recognition of his services and his development of aviation in the far north. The Dakotan asked early consideration of the measure to award the flier the medal of honor posthumously. Delegate Sutherland of Alaska also paid tribute to the aviator, recalling the interest Eielson had displayed in Alaska and other north regions before his flying days began.

The flier was a pioneer in polar exploration by airplane, he said.

Ole Eielson Bears Strain Well.

The older Eielson appears to have worn well under the strain of the long journey and the Pacific coast storms which lashed the steamer Alaska on which he was a passenger. So violent did the elements become that on one occasion Mr. Eielson was pitched from his bed, hurled across his cabin, but escaped with only a bruised arm. The storms which buffeted the ship resulted in a 24-hour delay in the body reaching North Dakota.

The mental agony of waiting weeks to hear whether or not his son was alive and the trip to and from Alaska to claim the body have had their effects. But Ole Eielson is a sturdy son of the north and bears his grief well.

MEETINGS SUCCESSFUL.

Stanley.—A resume of meetings held in Mountrail county by the county agent and G. W. Randlett of the Greater North Dakota association, shows that 2,200 pounds of alfalfa and 6,000 pounds of sweet clover were sold farmers of the county.

GRAIN LOANS PLANNED.

Grand Forks.—The Northwest Grain association is planning to make "pegged price" loans on grain. The Maximum amount loaned on bread wheats will be $1.13 per bushel less freight to Minneapolis, and with a spread of three cents between various grades down to No. 3. On Durum the maximum loan will be $1.

Romance Long Gone From Once Rich Mining Camps

Nevada City and Grass Valley were once the two largest cities in California, with wealth on every hand and excitement on every corner. For nearly three-quarters of a century those camps have been producing a steady stream of gold. First it was panned gold, or dust and nuggets washed in the sluice boxes of the forty-niners. Then it was placer gold from the immense hydraulic operations that followed the first wild rush. And today the pound, pound, pound of the stamp mills, crushing the quartz to extract the precious metal, goes on day and night.

But for the most part the hills and canyons resound to emptiness. Nature is effacing the scars of pick and dynamite with its healing green. Only the ghost towns with their reminiscing dodders recall the most thrilling treasure hunt in history.—The Golden Book.

Archeological Find

The remains of what must have been a handsome Roman villa of early imperial times were accidentally brought to light in the village of Carini near Palermo, Italy, during the course of digging the foundation of a new school building. Large slabs of polychrome marble which formed the floors of the villa have been discovered, together with a number of mosaics in good preservation. Traces of columns and statues probably belonging to a nympheum in the Pompeii style have also come to light.

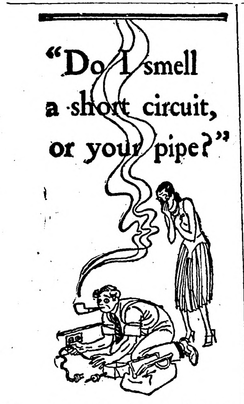
Judge—On what grounds are you seeking a divorce from your wife?

Husband — Misrepresentation. When I asked her to marry me she said she was agreeable.—Capper's Weekly.

Wants All the World to Know

"About ten years ago I got so weak and rundown that I felt miserable all over. One day my husband said, 'Why don't you take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound?' When I had taken two bottles I felt better so I kept on. My little daughter was born when I had been married twelve years. Even my doctor said, 'It's wonderful stuff.' You may publish this letter for I want all the world to know how this medicine has helped me."—Mrs. Horten Jones, 208 48th Street, Union City, N. J.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound



"Do I smell a short circuit, or your pipe?"

BUT why smoke a pipe that smells like burning insulation? . . . The poor chap probably never heard of Sir Walter Raleigh's favorite smoking mixture. He doesn't know there's a tobacco so mild and fragrant it gets the O. K. of even the fussiest pipe-sniffer. He doesn't know that true mildness needn't sacrifice body, flavor and "kick." He doesn't know he can smoke a pipe all day long without getting himself or anybody else all hot and bothered. In other words, he hasn't met Sir Walter Raleigh. Some day he will. Let's hope it's soon.

How to Take Care of Your Pipe

(Hint No. 4) Don't use a sharp knife to clean out the carbon. You may cut through the cake and chip the wood. A lot of little "woodspots" take away from the sweetness of a pipe. Use a dull knife or reamer. Send for our free booklet, "How to Take Care of Your Pipe." Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corporation, Louisville, Kentucky, Dept. 98.

Dean Herbert Hawkes of Columbia was talking about the revised curriculum to go into effect in the autumn. "The change," he said, "will make university life pleasanter, but it won't make it laxer. Quite the contrary.

"I think it will do away with the student of Exe's type.

"Young Exe sauntered into a telegraph office and wrote out a telegram. The clerk ran over it several times, then he said:

"'Oh, well,' said Exe, 'what's the difference?'"

When Food Sours

Lots of folks who think they have "indigestion" have only an acid condition which could be corrected in five or ten minutes. An effective anti-acid like Phillips Milk of Magnesia soon restores digestion to normal.

Phillips does away with all that sourness and gas right after meals. It prevents the distress so apt to occur two hours after eating. What a pleasant preparation to take! And how good it is for the system! Unlike a burning dose of soda—which is but temporary relief at best—Phillips Milk of Magnesia neutralizes many times its volume in acid.

Next time a hearty meal, or too rich a diet has brought on the least discomfort, try—

With the New Science of Syllabics

By C. J. COFFMAN

Dean of All the Enumerators

Georgia

The Georgia Forehead.

"Arise and shine and be proud among your people." This might be said to be close to the meaning among the ancients, of the first four letters of your name, divided into two syllables, GE and OR.

You must be subject quite a lot, Georgia, to the old idea, "Let George do it." Among the Greeks, GEORGOS means farmer, and he did about everything. He produced the food, and generally for very tiny pay, that the argumentative and philosophical Athenians ate.

Laughter and amusement go well with you, but what people do not suspect is the wonderful capacity of your mind for law. Even when you have never taken any interest in the legal profession, all of your friends have discovered your well-balanced and decisive mind, indicated by your fine forehead.

One of the Georgias who has exemplified this tendency toward law is Georgia Bullock, domestic court judge of Los Angeles, who is really doing a great deal more good in the world than will probably ever be known. The nature of her work is naturally very confidential and her wisdom must approach that of Solomon.

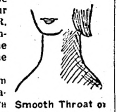
You could do things like that. Or you could take up another form of law, the law of health, for you would make quite a wonderful doctor. In this way, you could bring happiness and help to people, and your light would shine out beautifully. You might even emulate the example of another Georgia that I know, so much beloved by all her friends.

This is Georgia Bernard Brown of Sioux City, Iowa, counselor and friend to all who come to her promoter of the good among women and helpfulness to girls, she is almost the mother of two states.

* * *

Gertrude

"Gertrude is her name and means
She shall have dominion
None shall stop nor come between
The rule of her opinion."



Smooth Throat of Gertrude.

The outstanding fact signified by your name, Gertrude, is a curious combination of the meaning of your first syllable. GER, in the ancient languages of both the Hebrew and the Greek.

Combined from the two, the syllable GER means, "a stranger to old age." The inference is that you need never grow old!

Go to the mirror. See how smooth and round your throat is. It can always remain that way, but there is a special secret attached to its doing so.

That secret is simply the holding of kindly, unenvious thoughts toward others in a superior position.

Going a little further into your name, we find the ancients giving part of it to mean, "a little chamber." This is the secret of your heart, and if you keep your thoughts true and clean, inside of this secret place, everything else will take care of itself.

The last syllable of your name, RUD (leaving off the modern E), really meant the presence of the Lord, and brings you the influence of dominion.

What a great joy it is to have perfect dominion over all the phases of your life, physical, mental and spiritual. You can do it by keeping your thoughts only on the ways you are going to proceed to win.

Simply ignore opposition. Read the little verse at the top again.

Look at the way Gertrude Ederle overcame the tremendous opposition of natural law and physical resistance when she swam the English channel. Think of it, 21 miles of cold, choppy and stubborn waves! And yet we shiver, sometimes, in our cold shower in the morning.

Or Gertrude Atherton, overcoming mental resistance in writing her novels. Go on, Gertrude, you can win.

Splendid Gift to City

Maymont, Richmond, Va., was the home of Major and Mrs. James H Dooley. By the provisions of the will of Major Dooley it became a city park at the death of his wife and the house became the Dooley museum. The gardens are considered some of the finest in the South and the house is filled with beautiful rugs, furniture and art gems.

Menace to Health

Invisible clouds of carbon monoxide given off by motors standing in traffic blocks are stated to be a growing danger in large towns. Experiments on a guinea pig in a traffic jam showed that gas intoxication took place within three minutes.

They Wield the Strap

No ancestors except their immediate ones seem to have an effect on the manners of children.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Harold's Mother Knew Answer

"Yes, sir, I am certainly proud of my little boy," says Mrs. H. M. Smith, 421 Topeka Ave., Topeka, Kansas. "He's five and weighs fifty-seven pounds. He's the picture of health as you can see, and I feel like he'll always be that way as long as I can get California Fig Syrup. I have used it with him ever since he was a year old. I knew what to give him for his colds and his feverish, upset spells because Mother used California Fig Syrup with all of us as children. I have used it freely with my boy and he loves it. It always fixes him up, quick."

In many homes, like this, the third and fourth generations are using pure, wholesome California Fig Syrup because it has never failed to do what is expected of it. Nothing so quickly and thoroughly purges a child's system of the souring waste which keeps him cross, feverish, headachy, bilious, half-sick, with coated tongue, bad breath and no appetite or energy as long as it is allowed to remain in the little stomach and bowels. Fig Syrup gives tone and strength to these organs so they continue to act as Nature intends them to do, and helps build up and strengthen weak, pale and underweight children. Over four million bottles used a year shows its popularity. The genuine, endorsed by physicians for 50 years, always bears the word "California."

"Davy Jones" Long the Evil Spirit of Sailors

There have been numerous guesses as to the origin of "Davy Jones." It has been said that "Davy" is connected with "deva," from which we have our word "devil." According to Brewer, "Jones" is a corruption of Jonah, the prophet, who was thrown into the sea. "Locker," in seaman's phrase, means any repetacle for private stores; and "duffy" is a ghost or spirit among the West Indian negroes. The whole phrase is, "He is gone to the place of safekeeping, where duffy Jonah was sent." Smollett's "Peregrine Pickle," chapter 13, says: "This same Davy Jones, according to the mythology of sailors, is the fiend that presides over all the evil spirits of the deep, and is seen in various shapes, warning the devoted wretch of death and woe."

"Had One Cold After Another"

Beloit (South) Wis.—"I had spent a winter in the woods, was out in all kinds of weather and exposed myself—had one cold after another. It finally settled in my bronchials and chest causing me to have a chronic, hacking cough. I had to come home and give up doing anything. But, by the time I had taken three bottles of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery I had regained my health so that I was able to go to work in the mill, feeling like a fighting cock. Ever since then I have been recommending this medicine." Frank Kingsley, 201 Miller St. Dealers.

The Law Abiders

Owen Wister, the Philadelphia novelist, was talking at a luncheon about the wild regions where his vivid stories are placed.

"A tenderfoot from the East," said Mr. Wister, "once visited Tin Can, for it was rumored that oil had been struck in the neighborhood. The tenderfoot put up at the Tin Can Palace hotel, a structure partly of wood and partly of canvas, and as the landlord was making his bed, he said nervously:

"'I trust this is a law-abiding community, friend?'

"The landlord straightened up from his bed making and picked his teeth with his bowie knife thoughtfully. Then he said:

"'Wall, stranger, it's a lynch-law-abidin' community.'"

Another Use

When Babies FRET

There are times when a baby is too fretful or feverish to be sung to sleep. There are some pains a mother cannot pat away. But there's no time when any baby can't have the quick comfort of Castoria! A few drops, and your little one is soon at ease—back to sleep almost before you can slip away.

Remember this harmless, pure vegetable preparation when children are ailing. Don't stop its use when Baby has been brought safely through the age of colic, diarrhea, and other infantile ills. Give good old Castoria until your children are in their teens! Whenever coated tongues tell of constipation; whenever there's any sign of sluggishness that needs no stronger medicines to relieve. Castoria is pleasant-tasting; children love to take it. Buy the genuine—with Chas. H. Fletcher's signature on wrapper.

PICNICS AND PICNICS

THERE are picnics and picnics. Even people who turn up their noses at picnics in general are forced to admit that there are some kinds which are really enjoyable—but the incorrigible picnicker maintains that all are enjoyable. The first group of people will prefer the lazy al fresco meal which consists of merely eating supper in the summerhouse, or, at most, taking along folding chairs and tables to some nearby grassy spot. But those of hardier spirit will scorn such compromises, and insist on driving far out in the country to stop beside some brook and build a roaring fire on which the succulent picnic hash and the aromatic coffee can be cooked.

Menus for Both

Whichever group you belong to, there are menus for you which will be satisfactory and yet easy to prepare. In the first case, the absence of a fire means that all the foods, except beverages, such as coffee, which can be carried in a thermos bottle, must be cold. But they can be substantial, just the same. The second menu allows for cooking food but must be rather simpler and its ingredients easy to carry, as storage space is always at a premium on a picnic. "Have large amounts of a few foods" is this picnic's watchword.

Salmon and Rice Salad: Mix together very gently contents of a number 1 can of salmon, one cup of boiled rice, and one and one-half cups sliced celery. Marinate 15 minutes in French dressing. Add one tablespoon capers, one-fourth cup chopped, sweet pickles, and one-fourth cup sliced radishes, and moisten slightly with mayonnaise. Arrange in a lettuce-lined bowl, mask with mayonnaise and arrange eight deviled eggs on the top. This will serve eight.

Bacon and Pimiento Sandwiches: Chop fine the contents of a four-ounce can of pimientos, add three tablespoons chopped, stuffed olives and one-half cup dry, fried bacon. Add enough salad dressing to moisten, and spread between buttered bread with a lettuce leaf in each.

Camp Hash: Heat four tablespoons bacon fat in skillet, add two finely cut, large onions, and two large, chopped green peppers. Sauté until brown. Add one-fourth cup water, and turn in two twelve-ounce cans corned beef, twelve cold boiled potatoes (diced), and seasonings to taste. Heat thoroughly, allowing hash to brown on the bottom. Turn over with spatula, being careful not to stir and make the hash mushy. This will satisfy ten to twelve camp appetites.

Ham and Tomato Sandwiches: Spread deviled ham on buttered bread, lay a slice of tomato on top, spread with a little mayonnaise and top with another slice of buttered bread. This sandwich should be made at the picnic.

Picnic Dessert

If you think the picnickers are going to be particularly hungry, you could make Indian Nut Pudding in the morning and take it out to the picnic in the baking dish, substituting it for the ice-cream. To make the pudding, scald two cups evaporated milk diluted with two cups water in the top of a double boiler. Add one-half cup cornmeal and stir for five minutes. Let cook five minutes more, then remove and cool slightly. Add one cup molasses, one teaspoon salt, one teaspoon allspice, one-half teaspoon ginger, one-fourth cup butter and two beaten eggs. Add one cup chopped, vacuum-packed walnuts, pour into a buttered baking dish, and bake uncovered in a slow oven until knife comes out clean. This means about 325 degrees F. for 45 to 60 minutes. Stir occasionally during the first ten minutes to keep the nuts from sinking. This makes enough pudding for eight.*

Given Farewell Parties

The people of Holt ane community gave Mr. and Mrs. Carl Surmo and son a farewell party in the community hall here Saturday night.

The hall was filled to capacity and those who came to enjoy the the evenEng with the Surmo family had a good time.

Mr. Surmo has purchased a farm a mile south of St. Hilaire and will move there this week.

They have made their home east of Holt for years, which makes it hard to see them leave, but their many friends here wish them success in their new home and hope to see them come here often.

A farewell party was given at at the community hall on Wednesday evening for Mr. and Mrs. Markus Udstrand and family.

The Udstranc family have made their home in this community the past thirty-five year, and have a host of friends who regret to see them leave.

A very large crowd came to spend the evening with the Udstrands, the time being spent at visiting and and dancing.

Mr. Udstrand and family will move to Thief River Falls to make their future home.

The News joins their many friends in wishing them luck and happiness in their new home.

Card of Thanks

We wish to take this means of extending our heartfelt thanks to those who extended us aid and comfort in our recent grief, the loss of our beloved husband and father. To Rev. Held Shooting Match

On Sunday the Ringbo Rifle club held another shooting match at the local garage. According to a report from one of the members they had a very good match and that the scores ran high for some of the boys.

In the score card for the last match we made a mistake in Mr. Davidson's score. Instead of 297 it was 267.

Paying The Fiddler

"Paying the Fiddler", a comedy-drama in three acts, by Lillian Martimer, amasingly dramatizes one of the most familiar phenomena in American life; the family that lives recklessly beyond its income.

The castle family is plainly headed for disaster. The crash comes when the spoiled son of the household all but kills a child with his speeding motor car, thereby bringing abour his father's physical and financial collapse.

Together with the financial situation we find interwoven two interesting love affairs between four charming oharacters.

What is the outcome of the Castle affair? Everyone will have an opportunity to see the problem solved at some future date.

School Notes

High School

Examinatins are being given thic week, and report cards will be out Friday.

Easter vacation will begin Friday. Classes will be resumed Tuesday, April 11.

The teachers will enjoy Easter vacatien at their homes.

R. A. Werner was a visitor at school on Friday.

The play cast attended the play at Alvarado. Mr. Larson and Mr. Overum acted as chauffeur.

Seventh and Eighth Grades

The seventh and eighth graders are having exames.

The boys are playing basbet ball, as Spring is here.

News is not very extent in this room this week.

Fifth and Sixth Grades

We finished our W.C.T.U. essays on Wednesday. We are eagerly awaiting the reports from the judges.

"My Ambition" is the theme for the Industrial Arts work this week. To be a clerk in a confectionrey store is the most popular vacation.

The fifth grade will give a short Easter program on Friday in connection with their reading club. Gertrude and Gladys are arranging the program.

In the fifth grade language class we are studying one of America's most popular birds, the Robin. When we have finished this we shall make booklets on our little friend.

Third and Fourth Grades

The pupils are all looking foreward to Easter vacation.

They are now busy making Easter gifts.

The third grade has finished the composition on Holland and they have also finished their booklets on Holland.

The following poems were contributed by the pupils to their room:

SPRING

Spring is here and I am glad.
Some of them are very sad.
We hear the birds singing singing
Spring is here.

Doris Larson, 4th grade.

The March Wind

Oh! March wind! You are strong.
What do you do all day?
You are so streng you blow our hats away.
Oh, go away March Wind, go.
Let the flowers come out of their long winter sleep.
Let them come out and peep.

Lucille Horien, 3rd grade.

SPRING

Spring is here.
And I am very glad.
But some are very, very sad.
And wish winter was here.
I wish summer was here.
When flowers bloom.
And fall again,
And back to old winter go.

Opal Werner, 3rd grade.

First and Second Grades

The first and second grade pupils were out observing nature on Tuesday evening. They saw moss, green grass, small green leaves, and that the buds on the trees were bursting.

They have added three more birds to their bird list which are meadowlark, blackbird and robin.

On Friday Harriet Wahlin, Lois Hanson, Margie Swan, Bud Hanson, Ruby Werner, Irene Ness, Junieve Larson were visitors.

Christian Rustad

Christian Rustad was born at Northwood, Iowa, on April 4th, 1862. There he spent his early years being both baptized and confirmed in the Lutheran church of that place. He lived at the home of his birth until April 15, 1897 when he was united in marriage with Martha Nelson of the same place. After their marriage they moved up to Comstock, Minn., where they lived for 14 years, moving to Thief River Falls in 1912. After spending two years of their time there Mr. Rustad moved with his family here to Holt at which place they have made their home since.

But death again entered the family circle and took away an honored father, faithful husband and a trusty friend and brother. His sickness and death came very suddenly hence it was a blow to all those who mourn his loss.

Mr. Rustad leaves to mourn his loss a faithful wife and five children, they being Mrs. Olaf Hagen, Mrs. John Olson, Victor, Ruth and Leroy Rustad. He also leaves three brothers, S. Rustad of Comstock, H. Rustad, Chicago and O. Rustad of Northwood, Iowa. One sister, Mrs. Anderson resides at Portland, N. D.

I cannot say, and I will not say
That he is dead---he is just away,
With a cherry smile, and a wave of the hand,
He has wandered into an unknown land,
And left us dreaming how very fair
It needs must be, since he lingers there.
And you--O you, who the wildest year,
For the old time step and the glad return,
Think of him faring on, as dear
In the love of there as the love of here;
Think of him still as the same I say:
He is not dead--he is just away.

A friend.

Mr. and Mrs. Herman Peterson who have been farming the Gust Peterson farm the past few years, moved last week to the Folten place east of the river.

Mrs. Anton Leaves.

Mrs. L. P. Anton, nee Dorothy Fuller, who has been employed at the Marshall County State Bank here the past three years resigned here position last week and went to Thief River Falls where she will join her husband.

Mr. and Mrs. Anton were married last summer, but she retained her position here since. They will now move on a farm.

While here Mrs. Anton took part in all social functions and will be missed by her friends. The News joins her many friends here in wishing her success and happiness in her new home.

To Build New Road

Bids were opened at Warren on Tuesday for the grading and building of six miles of road west from the Chas. Heinze farm. This news came as a relief after many years of waiting for a new road thru that part of the community. We take our hats off to the boys who decided to let us have this road fixed.

Notice For Dragging Roads

Sealed bids will be received at the office of the Town Clerk, Town of Holt, Holt, Minnesota, up to 1 o'clock p. m., April 14th, 1930, for dragging Town roads as follows;

From SE corner of Sec. 29 to SW corner of Sec. 30; from SE corner of Sec. 17 to SW corner of Sec. 18; from SW corner Sec. 7 to SE corner of Sec. 8; between Sections 7 and 8; and from SW corner of Sec. 7 north 1 mile; from SW corner Sec. 4 east to SE corner of Sec. 1; and between Sections 1 and 2;

On the Town Line between Holt and Spruce Valley, beginning by the G. N. Ry., and proceeding east to the range line.

From SW corner Sec. 1 south to the town line; and between Sections 12 and 13, and 13 and 24;

From SE corner of Sec. 11 to SW corner of Sec. 9; and from SW corner of Sec. 28 and east 1½ miles.

State price per mile traveled. The Town Board reserves the right to reject any or all bids.

By order of the Town Board, Town of Holt.

49-50 T. B. Folden, Clerk.

A Sincere Handclasp--

TO the new families who are coming into this community, The Marshall County State Bank extends a cordial welcome.

We invite you to make this your Banking Home.

LIGHTS of NEW YORK

By GRANT DIXON

Homelike

Will James, the celebrated cowboy author-artist who wrote "Smoky" and other horse stories that have gone over big, was in New York recently. "Bill," as he is known to his friends, spent years in the saddle as a cowboy, roaming all over the cattle states of the West. Now he has a big ranch in Montana and spends most of his winters writing at San Antonio.

"Bill" invited me to his room at the Algonquin, and when he opened the door and I stepped in, I stepped on a Navajo blanket and spied another one on a couch.

"I always carry 'em with me when I travel," said James. "They're the only things that will keep me from getting so homesick that I'd hit the trail right out for the West."

* * *

Meaningless

One of the more meaningless details of New York life is the business of supplying references when one wants to move into a new apartment. A friend of mine, a dramatic critic, is lodged in a towering, exclusive building. He informs me he had to pass close scrutiny before he was allowed to sign a lease.

Yet his neighbor on the top floor is the proprietor of a speak-easy across the street. He is a relative of one of New York's most notorious gangsters. He is politically powerful, though, and once a year gives a huge ball in his own honor at one of the better hotels. His apartment is a fortress. The door is of armor steel. He didn't like ordinary windows, so he had a church supply house make him stained glass windows.

* * *

The Vanishing German

There are, even at this late date, five German bands in New York, and if you look hard enough you may find one playing on a street corner. But the business isn't what it used to be. Variety reports that the average income for each man in these bands was a dollar a day last year. They used to get "throw money" by playing in front of speakeasies, but the police chased them away.

Al Fresco Dinner

Alexander Mazzone, a gatekeeper on the Long Island railroad, has a lunch hour from noon to 12:45 p. m. No trains pass his gate during that time, but Alexander feels that he should not leave his post even then.

So, promptly at noon, he gets out a folding table, sets it between the rails, spreads a cloth and serves himself a lunch. It is only fair, thinks Alexander, that he and not some foolish motorist should get bumped in case an unscheduled train should arrive during the noonday.

* * *

A Hot Eire

Sam White smelled a fire the other day and turned in an alarm. He was in a building at the foot of Manhattan, and in that district a single alarm brings out more apparatus than two or three would farther uptown. When a dozen or so pieces of fire-fighting machinery had arrived Sam discovered that the fire had been in the rear of his trousers. He had put his pipe in his hip pocket. Naturally, the newspapers made much of the story.

The next day a veteran newspaper man told me that none had written so clever a headline as a friend of his had written twenty years ago concerning a similar occurrence. The headline was: "Sixty Firemen Rush to Blaze in One Pair of Pants."

Old Stuff

A convention of dentists has just been informed that in 1,000 years the human race will be born without teeth. Why wait that long? Toothless babies are quite common now.

Increased Interest in Good Books Universal

Chicago.—Books will supplant jazz as the pass word to popularity in the new decade.

A well informed mind will be the open sesame to social leadership in the thirties, as the ability to entertain musically was the badge of popularity in the twenties, according to Ellsworth D. Foster, managing editor of the World Book.

"Indications on every hand point to an increased interest in good books," said Mr. Foster, in an address before a group of college students here. "Interest in good books is not confined to any class of society or to any particular age group, but is practically universal.

"Children are no longer content with light literature but demand meat in their reading, going to the same books as those used by their elders for their information about things in general."

Blue Bandanas New Fad of French Women

Paris.—The answer of the women of Paris to the craze of red suspenders which is sweeping the masculine element of France is the blue bandana. No smart French woman would think of blowing her nose in anything but a blue handkerchief these days, and the larger the bandana the better.

INVALID DEVOTES LIFE TO OTHERS

Seattle Doctor Is Practical Idealist.

Seattle, Wash.—A practical idealist, whose credo is "service" and who gives a philosophy of cheerfulness to those who are down, such a man is Dr. Frank R. Loope of Seattle.

For eighteen years he has been bedridden.

A reporter walked into the "office," a big sun porch, as one of two telephones at his bed rang and the doctor proceeded to aid a World war veteran in getting out of jail.

Doctor Loope lay flat on his back, the two telephones within easy reach, letter files at the side of his bed, a checkbook on the covers, magazines, papers, cigarettes and a radio at hand.

And there he directs almost innumerable enterprises—aiding individuals to overcome physical handicaps.

The physician picked up a specially framed mirror and focussed it on his guests. He is unable to turn his head, but he can move his eyes and arms. Thus he is able to follow the movements and expressions of any one in his room.

Finds Jobs for Unemployed.

Under the general title of "sunshine industries," Doctor Loope is the directing genius behind a wheel chair store, a repair store, is building up a fund for an industrial home for shut-ins and arranges hundreds of programs for invalids.

The industrial home—where those aiding themselves would be able to live close to their work—is his big dream.

In addition to that work, Doctor Loope finds positions for those who have been handicapped. He distributes radios, gives advice, acts as father confessor to hundreds of persons, advises as a physician and arranges for medical attention.

His telephone rang constantly during the interview.

The soldier was paroled to his custody, then a hysterical woman telephoned. Calm tones replied to shrill voice, and then, ironically, an organization that had obtained his telephone number called to ask him to buy two tickets to a dance.

Conducts Column.

The doctor is not a wealthy man, in fact he frequently encounters difficulty in obtaining funds for his many enterprises, in addition to those needed for himself.

For years after he was stricken, the doctor related, "I felt I was terribly abused." Then he adopted the philosophy of "Sunshine and Smiles," the title of a column he conducts for shut-ins in the Seattle Star.

"I don't preach. I serve," he said. "Help the shut-in to help himself—to keep himself away from his troubles."

Although bedridden eighteen years, Doctor Loope is no invalid. He is more healthy mentally by far than millions who have complete use of their bodies.

Disease Kills Canadian Geese Wintering in U. S.

Ocracoke, N. C.—A malady that resulted in extermination of thousands of wild Canadian geese has made its appearance among migratory fowls wintering along the Carolina coast. The disease results from undernourishment and from feeding in localities where the bottoms are covered with mud.

During windy weather game taking refuge along the island here could be picked up or easily caught by small boys. They put them in goose ponds, where they soon died.

In some sections the shores are strewn with dead game that has been washed in by the tides. A gunner going out during the close of the season could expect four to six of his bag of eight to be underweight and unsuitable for food.

Street Car Conductor Now a Soviet Chieftain

Moscow.—Yesterday a street car conductor—today an important member of the cabinet of the Russian Federated Socialist Republics.

That, literally, is the story of A. S. Bandurin, whose designation as secretary of the council of people's commissars of the R. S. F. S. R. (the largest of the groups constituting the Soviet union) has been announced.

Bandurin has for years been an active Communist and prominent in party circles. However, he held no official post. Until this appointment he earned his living as a conductor on a Moscow tram. His elevation, as may be supposed, has stimulated conversation in trams and this writer has heard several weary conductors asked when they would become commissars.

French Military Medals for 45,000 War Veterans

Paris.—Twelve years after the war 45,000 French soldiers are to be awarded the military medal, formerly one of France's highest war honors. The medals will go to men cited for bravery and wounded during the war, but who have since received no further recognition.

Leper Grateful

Cedar Rapids, Iowa.—Forty years ago V. King loaned a sobbing boy 20 cents so he could see a show. King received news of a leper's death recently and with it a check for $2.57. It was the entire estate of the boy he had befriended.

WILD ROSE MOST POPULAR FLOWER

More Than Million Votes Cast in Contest.

New York.—The people of the United States named the wild rose as the national flower in the American Nature association campaign just ended. Rechecking of the more than a million votes shows the wild rose rolled up a total of 492,811 votes out of the 1,067,672 votes cast. It gained a plurality of more than 150,000 votes over the columbine, the nearest contender.

The wild rose won in every state except Colorado, Florida, Minnesota and Washington.

Pennsylvania, with 111,256 votes; Ohio, with 78,648; New York, with 63,835, and Wisconsin, with 59,779, led the country in number of ballots cast. Washington supported the columbine more vigorously than any other state.

Only seven votes separate the rose and its rival in South Dakota. More than 6,000 people, Americans living outside the 48 states, are represented in the "No State" column.

The columbine had 261,451 backers, who threatened, during early December, to sweep under the rose in a flood of votes. When the contest closed, however, the leader was still gaining.

More than 65 per cent of the vote was divided between the two leaders and there is no question of these being the national favorites. The violet, goldenrod, American beauty rose, phlox, daisy, dogwood and mountain laurel, which finished in the order listed, never had a chance of victory. All other flowers received but three and one-half per cent of the total.

The wild rose, despite criticisms to this effect, is not the flower of England; that emblem is the cultivated rose. The campaign did not designate one particular variety of wild rose, but left it possible for each community to feel that its local representative of the genus was the choice of the country.

Bethel College Co-Eds Seeking Dates by Ads

Newton, Kan.—The co-eds of Bethel college, located here, are apparently lonesome and they have admitted it.

After having admitted it, they have set about to remedy the situation by seeking attention from the male members of the collegiate world. The girls used the student paper, the Bethel Collegian, and in their advertisement asked eligible men to call at the "dorm hangout."

Not only have the co-eds advertised for "dates" but they have added special attractions to the dormitory. All have "chipped in" to buy a number of card games. The advertisement suggested "that the boys were cordially invited to come and participate in these games."

To add to the attractiveness of the dormitory a "fat woman's club" has been organized for the purpose of attaining boyish figures. Members are exercising daily and dieting.

Collector Finds Dagger in 'Red Sultan's' Scepter

Paris.—Recently a Parisian antiquarian was handling one of his most prized possessions, the gold and jade scepter of Abdul Hamid the Second, the "Red Sultan" of Turkey. He suddenly heard a click and, to his great astonishment, drew forth from the scepter head a glittering dagger.

The discovery recalled many stories of the sultan, who was called the "Great Assassin" because of his frightful massacre of Balkan and Armenian subjects and who never dared sleep in a bed because he feared assassination for himself.

Manx Cat Owner Takes Insurance for Liability

Leominster, Mass.—Lawrence F. Marshall has insured himself against personal liability that might result from his Manx cat scratching or biting anything. A Hartford (Conn.) company issued the policy after securing a veterinarian's voucher that the cat was in good health.

The policy stipulates $5,000 as maximum for injuries to or for the death of one person and $10,000 for injuries to or for the death of more than one.

The cat is a male, weighs 14 pounds, and is eighteen months old.

U. S. Parley Reporters Give British Thrill

London.—The freedom with which the American newspaper correspondents approach the members of their delegation to the five-power conference astonishes and, at the same time, amuses the columnist of a well-known London daily.

"It is a constant delight to me," writes the commentator, "to see and hear the American newspaper specialists at the naval conference approaching their own delegates—the big men who are trying to agree on small navies.

"The correspondents are like so many small submarines suddenly bobbing up from nowhere and confronting these political battleships fearlessly—and the statesmen like it, too. It is brotherly, natural, homelike."

Bride Tells Her Secret

"FOR a young bride of twenty-one to lose her vitality and pep is disastrous, almost a sacrilege," says Mrs. George E. Pillow, of Franklin, Va. "That, however," she continues, "is just what I did."

"I had only been married a few months to an athletic husband, who went everywhere and did everything. I tried to keep up with his pace, and simply collapsed under the strain. I never was really ill; just sallow-skinned, depressed, and lifeless. Swimming, dancing, golf, I just couldn't face them. When I began to lose my clear complexion, I was desperate.

"Then one day a girl friend came to pay me a visit. In the bottom of her little bag of clothes lay a crystal-clear bottle—Nujol! A short woman-to-woman talk—a telephone call to a neighboring drug store—and my future happiness was settled.

"That was a year ago. Now I too am never without Nujol, which has brightened and cleansed my body like a cake of pure soap. I eat, sleep, swim, and hike with the enthusiasm of a child. My complexion is all it used to be—and best of all—I am my husband's little pal again."

The wonderful thing about crystal-clear Nujol is that it is not a medicine; it contains no drugs—it cannot hurt even a baby. It is simply the normal internal lubrication which your body needs. Let Nujol clear the poisons out of your body (we all have them), and flood the sunshine of happiness into your life.

Beauty, Charm, Clear Skin—How Can They be Won?

It sounds like a fairy tale, but millions of people have proved it. So can you. Get Nujol at any drug store—sold only in sealed packages, with the Nujol trademark. It costs but a few cents and it will make you feel like a million dollars!

Youngster Scored One on Older Generation

A sixteen-year-old youth, oldest of a family of three boys, was being cautioned by his parents on the dangers of fast and reckless operation of automobiles. He was told that it would be only a matter of a few months until he would be entrusted with the family car and that he would have to demonstrate his responsibility.

"There can be no forty and fifty-mile-an-hour driving in town," he was admonished by the father.

"You know," followed his mother, "that when I was a girl and your father was a boy, all we had was a horse and buggy and the best speed we ever made was only ten or twelve miles an hour."

"Yes, mother," chimed the irrepressible youth, "but don't forget that you went as fast as you could."

Historians Must Have Overlooked This Fact

The erection of a statue in France to the woman inventor of Camembert cheese led Judge Otto Rosalsky of New York to say;

"Nobody will dispute the invention of Camembert, but the French have a bad habit of claiming all inventions, all. Did you know that they claim to have invented the airplane, the phonograph, the telephone, the submarine and the locomotive? Well, they do.

"The French remind me of the town of Peebles. A visitor said to his Peebles host:

"'Fine town, Peebles.'

"'Yes,' said his host, 'yes, you bet Peebles is a fine town.'

"'What statue's that?"

"'That? Why, that's William the Conqueror, a Peebles man.'"—Detroit Free Press.

Oddities in Mishap

An automobile driven by a Norway (Maine) man sideswiped another car, cutting off the mudguards and running board, shot through a fence, plunged down a ten-foot embankment to the icy covering of a lake, tipped over and was bent and twisted beyond repair. But neither the windshield nor a headlight or window was broken; the driver was not injured and not a drop of coffee filling the bottom of a dinner bucket was spilled.

Serious Thought in Jest

"I pity you if you have to stay here all day," commented the customer, shivering in the cold meat market.

"Well," said the butcher, "pity without relief is like mustard without beef"

BAYER

Bayer Aspirin stops pain quickly. It does it without any ill effects. Harmless to the heart; harmless to anybody. But it always brings relief. Why suffer?

BAYER ASPIRIN

Fate's Little Joke

For thirty years Edward Lane, Palo Alto (Calif.) carpenter, left his tools unlocked, despite repeated warnings from Mrs. Lane that they would be stolen. One night he told his wife: "Well, for once my tools are safe. I locked them up in the garage I finished today." The next morning the tools were missing, taken by a thief who looted the garage during the night.

ONLY A DOCTOR KNOWS WHAT A LAXATIVE SHOULD BE

Danger lies in careless selection of laxatives! By taking the first thing that comes to mind when bad breath, headaches, dizziness, nausea, biliousness, gas on stomach and bowels, lack of appetite or energy warns of constipation, you risk forming the laxative habit.

Depend on a doctor's judgment in choosing your laxative. Here's one made from the prescription of a specialist in bowel and stomach disorders. Its originator tried it in thousands of cases; found it safe for women, children and old folks; thoroughly effective for the most robust man. Today, Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, as it is called, is the world's most popular laxative. It is composed of fresh herbs and other pure ingredients. You can get it, in generous bottles and ready for use, at any drugstore.

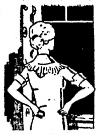
Speedy Toys in Europe

Children in Europe are demanding speed in their toys. Six-year-old Mario Conterio recently appeared on the streets of Paris on his motor-driven unicycle. Three-year-old Warner Kimpel, son of a famous German auto racer, has his own electric racing car, and Alfredo Bonifatti, aged four, drives through the streets of Rome on a tiny, but speedy, motor cycle.

St. Barthoromew's hospital in London was founded more than 800 years ago.

WHEN IT LOOKS DARK to any weak, nervous or ailing woman, Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription comes to her aid. Women in every walk of life today say Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is a reliable medicine. It is made from roots and herbs, sold by druggists, in both fluid and tablets.



One woman who used it said: "I was in a very nervous and rundown state of health, could not sleep, would be restless all through the night. I grew very weak, pale and thin. After taking a few bottles of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription my nerves quieted down, I could sleep, gained strength and took on weight and was in good physical condition. I wish every weak woman knew how good the 'Favorite Prescription' is for weak and ailing women."—Mrs. Alice Schuler, 509 Short St., Faribault, Minn.

—31—

"Done the same, myself, in your place. Humph! But I couldn't very well help floggin' you, y'know. Discipline, and all that sort of thing."

"You needn't have pressed me," asserted Fellowes, recovering a sense of injustice.

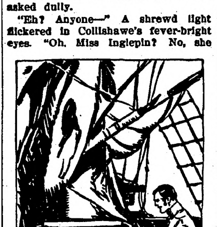
Collishawe frowned again. There were tiny beads of sweat on his forehead, and his gaunt cheeks grew gaunter.

"Ain't sure," he answered. "Couldn't help myself, though. That swine Chater. Swore you were a British subject, said anyway 'twould be dangerous to let you get into New York—you'd talk about the True Bounty meetin' us."

Fellowes rocked on his heels, eyes shut, an awful nausea possessing him.

"There wasn't—anyone else?" he asked dully.

"Eh? Anyone—" A shrewd light flickered in Collishawe's fever-bright eyes. "Oh, Miss Inglepin? No, she knew nothin' of it. Matter of fact, I've thought since, Chater hooked me deliberately while she was away. Kind of thing the cursed swine would do, y'know."



"Done the Same in Your Place," He Repeated.

"I'm sorry," Fellowes said.

Collishawe's jaws contracted somewhat, his first real sign of emotion.

"Done the same in your place," he repeated. "I've thought a lot about it. Funny how a feller gets things twisted, eh?"

He caught his breath.

"Pain?" Fellowes exclaimed quickly.

"Yes-es. Think you could get me—bit of rum?"

A sailor brought a pannikin on the run, and Collishawe lapped it eagerly while Fellowes supported his head.

"That's—better," he said in the crisp, impersonal tones habitual with him. "Y'know, I've often thought about that time—floggin' you, and all. Bothered me. But I can't see how I could have let you off."

There was a new humbleness in Fellowes' heart.

"I expect you couldn't have," he admitted.

"Sportin' of you to say so. But I'd have felt just as you did if you'd flogged me. Some things a feller can't forgive."

"Why can't we forgive?" cried Fellowes. "Why should we go through life hating people?"

"Not a preacher—can't say. But any feller'd hate a feller flogged him, especially if he felt there was a dirty play behind it." A streak of passion warmed Collishawe's tone. "What I can't go is havin' a rat like Chater start all this. D—n his soul! If I find him in hell—"

"He's dead," Fellowes blurted out.

"Dead? You mean the True Bounty—"

A tremor convulsed Collishawe, and once more the ominous trickle of red seeped through his bandages.

"Miss Inglepin? She—you mean they went down?"

"No, the True Bounty is sunk; but Miss Inglepin—"

"I'm here," Cara's voice panted. "Oh, where is he? Where is James?"

The stolid ring of sailors was burst asunder as if Cuffee's Big Sarpent had been discharged into their midst, and Cara fluttered down beside Collishawe.

"James! What have they done to you? Oh, Father, Father, please fetch Doctor O'Shaughnessy."

"No use," said Collishawe. With an effort that was pitiful, he raised a hand in Cara's direction, and both her's closed around it. "Goner. But no hard feelin's—eh, Fellowes?"

Fellowes bowed his head, heartsick. For Cara, he saw, he didn't exist.

"But there must be something to do," she was saying in a strained voice, tears streaking her cheeks. "Do let me see!"

Collishawe tightened his grasp of her hand, and in response to the effort the trickle that flowed from his bandages became a stream.

"No, no," he denied faintly. "Don't!"

And she saw, as Fellowes did, the gray shadow that mantled his face. She must have seen something, too, in the fading eyes that Fellowes did not see, for she bent swiftly, and her lips touched his.

"Worth everything," he murmured, smiling.

For a breath the shadow lifted from his face. The light blazed in his eyes again.

"Nail up that flag, damme!" he cried. "You" not strike whilst I'm—"

Fellowes stooped and caught the poor, mangled clay as it slipped sideways. His shoulder chanced to touch Cara's, and she drew back with an instinctive aversion that blistered his self-respect.

"This is the fruit of hate," she said in a hard, still voice. "But death is better than some things—yes, better than living in hate. Oh, sir, if you might know how I—how I despise you!"

She fumbled in her bosom, and produced a clean kerchief, which she spread over Collishawe's wan face.

'Come, Father," she said—and oh, how wearily! "We should try to help James' men."

Fellowes wanted desperately to speak to her, to comfort her, to excuse himself; but the words wouldn't come—a sense within himself informed him her mind was closed to him. Her mind and her heart. So much for victory!

CHAPTER XIII

Doubt

The Badger was sinking to the booming of the Centurion's minute guns, sinking with the sun that had draped a crimson curtain across the portals of the west. Aft, under the break of the poop, a carronade was made fast to ringbolts, square amidships, and on top of it was lashed the bundle of sailcloth that held Collishawe's body. The Englishman rested where he had died, and from the stump of the mizzen still floated the flag he had ordered nailed there, one corner torn by a roundshot.

The sloop-of-war reared up, struggling to keep her bow above water; but presently she sagged forward, and this time she failed to recover herself. Her fo'c's'le commenced to slant. Masses of green water surged through the for'ard ports, and she started to slide under as if she was coasting down a hill that grew steeper and steeper. Waves licked at the bundle on the carronade, submerged it, slapped the poop railing—and her stern canted high in air, the White Ensign at the mizzen standing out straight in the breeze as it was engulfed.

The last minute gun boomed, and Fellowes launched a crisp stream of orders almost before the echoes had died away, none but himself aware that he must have something to divert his mind or else go mad.

Cara Inglepin ignored the resumption of discipline's sway. Her gaze remained fixed on the swirl of wreckage that marked the spot where the Badger had disappeared. But presently, as the brig forged ahead, the litter of spars and deck fittings dwindled to insignificance, and she became aware of the orderly hum of activities around her—and of her father.

"Do you suppose I might speak to Captain Fellowes?"

"Is it wise, Cara?" her father asked. "I am bound to admit Fellowes has been civil, but I think we do well to avoid him as much as possible. And I'll not have him suspecting us of pleading for mercy."

She laid a caressing palm on Ben Inglepin's face, which was neither so plump nor so rubicund as it had been, after a day's toil in a stuffy cockpit that presented one endless succession of horrors.

"I owe him an apology, Father," she explained simply. "And I must thank him."

"Thank him?"

"For his generosity. It was noble."

"He's generous and noble enough to see that we are by way of being hanged," Ben Inglepin retorted disagreeably.

"You're unfair, Father." Her lissome figure straightened. "If we merit it to be hanged, shall we complain of him? We knew the risks we must encounter. And if a stake such as ours is worth playing for, worth winning, 'tis worth losing a life for."

Wanted to Seize Cuba

The Ostend manifesto was a dispatch sent in 1854 to the United States government by the American ministers, at the courts of Great Britain, France and Spain, who had met in the city of Ostend for conference on the Cuban question. The dispatch stated that if Spain would not sell Cuba, the United States "would be justified under the laws of self-preservation to take the island by force and prevent it being Africanized like Haiti." It advised offering Spain $120,000,000 for the island. This recommendation was not accepted by the congress.

To Earn His Pay

Two football teams had played a number of drawn matches and it was decided to engage a professional referee for a deciding game.

A well-known official was approached by a party of tough-looking men.

"All right," said the referee. "I'll oblige you. What fee do you offer for my services?"

"Well," said one of the men, "that depends on how badly you're hurt."

One-Legged Burglar Gives Sleuths Chase

New York.—A one-legged seventeen-year-old boy gave detectives a merry chase around the Pennsylvania station. A bullet from one of the officers' guns "winged" the youth in his good leg and he was captured. Police say he and a confederate had robbed a drug store at the station.

GYPSY TRICKS OLD MAN OUT OF $2,000

Uses Clever Variation of Old Switch Game.

New York.—A variation of the old game of trading bad money for good popped into the Harlem police records recently. The victim, James Barry, sixty-five years old, a night watchman, had let a gypsy woman sew his savings, some $2,000, inside his shirt along with a charm that was to cure his eye trouble. After four days of the treatment Barry felt it was about time to change his shirt. He knew that his eyes were as bad as ever, and he discovered that his money was a whole lot worse.

Barry went to the gypsy's home, but found that she and the $2,000 had moved away. Then he told the police. He was walking home one day, rubbing his ailing eyes, when the gypsy hailed him from a doorway. She remarked that he looked badly and asked after his health. Barry told her about his eye troubles. She said she had a charm that would cure him. He wouldn't have to pay her a cent until it did, and then he could offer her what he liked.

To make the charm work properly, however, all of Barry's money must be tied up with it and sewn into his shirt. That was the way the gypsy's family had always done with the charm through the many generations whose ills it had cured. The idea seemed plausible enough, so Barry went to his bank and drew out his $2,000, the savings of a lifetime. He thought he saw the woman put his money in the little packet she sewed to his shirt, but he later discovered that it had been something else.

Magnifying Glass at Meals! Wife Asks Writ

Chicago.—It seems there was a Scotchman—

And he had a wife. And she got angry because the Scotchman was Scotch and acted like it; so she got an attorney named Victor Frolich to sue for divorce.

The wife's name is Helen Grace Johnson, and the Scotchman's name is Arthur. Mrs. Johnson alleged:

Her husband would not let her use a vacuum cleaner on the rugs because it was too severe on them. He made her use a broom, which caused her back grievous anguish.

He bought all the food—frugally.

He forced her to wear magnifying glasses at the table so the food would look like more.

(Interjection by Judge Harry A. Lewis—Oh, come now, there is a limit to credulity).

(Mrs. Johnson—I am under oath and I'll swear to it).

He had one alarm clock which had to do for his family and his parents downstairs. After it rang in the morning, the wife was forced to reset it and take it downstairs.

Anyway, the Scotchman named Arthur contested the divorce until he found out how much it would cost to fight the case. He said she could have the divorce—

Unless, of course, there was alimony.

There wasn't.

Gangster Slain; Trapped Gunman Then Kills Self

New York.—Gangsters armed with submachine and sawed-off shotguns put Frankie Dunn, former Hoboken millionaire beer king, "on the spot" less than a block and a half from Hoboken's city hall.

One of them, cornered by the police, committed suicide rather than be captured. Two others fled in a stolen car after wounding a patrolman. Their machine careened along a main street through the crowds and knocked down three children.

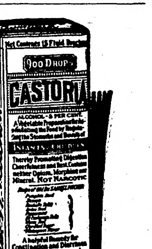
Dunn, who recently announced his "reformation," was shot twice and died a few hours later. Patrolman John O'Toole had three fingers of his left hand shot off in a battle with the gangsters.

An automobile license found in the pocket of the dead gangster was made out in the name of Frank Kelly of Hoboken. A short time after the battle two men in a coupe similar to that in which the fleeing gunmen escaped were captured in Jersey City. They said they were Frank Loreno and Alfred Orlando.

Hangman's Rope Used to Chase Evil Spirits

Paris.—For years a small piece of hangman's rope has been the talisman with which Senora Mercedes has warded off sickness, bad luck, and other ills. Now she has lost the bit of hemp, which is regarded all over Europe as a very potent charm, and although she has offered a reward of 1,000 francs for another such piece she has been unable to find one.

The upsets of Children



All children are subject to little upsets. They come at unexpected times. They seem twice as serious in the dead of night. But there's one form of comfort on which a mother can always rely; good old Castoria. This pure vegetable preparation can't harm the tiniest infant. Yet mild as it is, it soothes a restless, fretful baby like nothing else. Its quick relief soon sees the youngster comfortable once more, back to sleep. Even an attack of colic, or diarrhea, yields to the soothing influence of Castoria.

Keep Castoria in mind, and keep a bottle in the house—always. Give a few drops to any child whose tongue is coated, or whose breath is bad. Continue with Castoria until the child is grown! Every drugstore has Castoria; the genuine has Chas. H. Fletcher's signature on the wrapper.

Three Mothers Agree

When mother is tired, nervous or ill the whole home is upset. For her family's sake, every mother wants to be well and strong. These three women tell how Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound helps them to care for their families.

Mrs. H. Dolhonde,
6318 York St.,
New Orleans, Louisiana

"Before my last baby was born, I started taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I got such good results that I named her Catherine Lydia. I have six older children and five grandchildren, too. I am now taking the Vegetable Compound again because of my age. I eat and sleep better and I do all my housework, and my washing. I will do my best to answer letters."

Mrs. Harold Goodnow
36 Cane St.,
Fitchburg, Massachusetts

"I cannot praise your medicine enough. After my baby came I was rundown. I had to go to bed often through the day. I took three bottles of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and I felt like a different woman. If any mother has those tired feelings I advise her to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound."

Mrs. Lloyd R. Blasing,
115 So. Ohio St.,
Anaheim, California

"After my baby came I was so nervous and tired that I felt miserable. One day a booklet was left at our door and after reading it I decided to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I am now on my fourth bottle and I feel much stronger. It has helped me in every way and I feel sure that other women in rundown condition will pick up if they will only take a few bottles."

When The Phonograph Said The Wrong Thing

It was only four days left until the dance which the White hall College girls were giving in honor of their beloved teacher, Miss Good, who was leaving the next week.

Alice Bow was feeling anything but gay, in her hand she held a letler she had just received from her Aunt Myria who said she was going to stop at White hall College and take Alice along with her to see Aunt Sanmatha, Friday afternoon, Friday evening was when the dance was to be, and Alice did not want to miss it so she took her letter down to her chum Zela Browden who was as merry and carefree a girl as ever entered White hall.

When Alice had finished her tale of woe, Zela sighed, "Thats always the way, what can we do you'll have to be rescued some way. I have it you'll have to be sick so you can't go you can have—oh what can you have—I know mumps, and when Alice started to protest she shook her head never mind preaching about deceiving, I won't change we'll send a telegram to your Aunt and tell her to put off the visit until later. Zela had her way and the telegram was sent. That afternoon a telegram came to Alice seeing her aunts address on it she ran down to the parlor where Zela and the girls were playing the phonogeaph and singing on some blank records.

When Alice came in Zela was putting on a new blank record.

Holding out the telegram to Zela, Alice gasped, "read it you've the strongest heart". Zela read it and started to laugh. Finally she said, "Oh! Alice dear Auntys coming to take care of you, and how sick you must be", she added staring at the telegram again.

Now I am in for it cried Alice you are a horrid girl to suggest lieing to my aunt in the first place.

However Zela had her way and the next morning when Aunt Myria came she found Alice with her head all bandaged up and Zela carrying egg nogs, and milk to her. She never guessed that after light were out Zela carried a full tray up to Alice and the had a good time. She would have been astonished at the number of pickles Alice could eat too as you all know you cannot eat pickles and have the mumps at the same time.

Alice led an easy life until Friday when she wanted to get up and go downstairs to the parlor. Zela pleaded for her too and at last Aunt Myria gave in and Alice went down.

Zela was going to play the phonograph so picking up a record that she thought was Jazz she placed it on phonograph and started the machine.

Suddenly Zelas voice rang out Oh! Alice dear Aunty coming to take care of you and how sick you must be. Zela stared then started frantically to push and pull the machine and try to stop it but on and on it ran disclosing the whole plot. Finally it ground to a stop. Zela was staring at the phonograph. How could she know that when Alice handed her the telegram she had started it and recorded the whole plan.

Aunt Myria stopped laughing long enough to say "you win".

The first smashup that has happened at intersection of main street and the new highway, since the new highway was built last summer, occured here Tuesday evening.

Mr. and Mrs. Paul Marschalk and daughter of Warroad were coming into town from the north as was Gust Anderson of Mavie, when the latters truck hit the Marschalk car on the side as it turned into main street. Mr. Marchalk slowed down with his Ford in order to make the turn but, Mr. Anderson who had a load of brick on his truck, thought the road went straight on south and came too fast to stop or turn west on the curve.

The Marschalk car lost a fender, tire and got banged up some but the Anderson truck got the worst of it as it did not stop going south until it had went a couple of rounds with a hay press and came out quite badly bent up with a broken spring and fender. No one was hurt in the collission.

Mrs. K. Nyber of Thief River Falls spent a few days here this week visiting with relatives.

Mrs Victor Johnson, Mrs Paul Olson and Mrs. K. Nyberg visited with friends at Middle River on Tuesday.

Out of the seven bids received by Postmaster Young for the delivery of three cords of stove wood at the post office, four of them were a tie. The two highest bidders and the two lowest bidders were in a tie. Mr. Young stated that this was the first time that has ever happned.

In spite of our national knockers it can be said without fear of contradiction that the United States is a generous nation. We do spend a great deal of time in making money but at the same time we give away a lot of it. The figures prove this abundantly, and show that the United States is the most philanthropic nation on earth. For instance, in the year 1929 we exceeded all records in the amount of money given for public and charitable purposes. The bequests of this kind in the United States during the year amounted to two billion dollars, and this is an increase of a hundred and tenty millions over the best preceding year. Two billions of dollars is a sizeable sum, and if money talks, as it is usually credited with doing, it must have something to say about the generosity of the Aerican people.

Launch Drive to Prevent Forest Fires

Thousands of citizens have enrolled in the 1930 drive to prevent forest fires, announces Alfred L. Nelson, executive chairman of the committee in charge of the campaign.

With 30 state-wide organizations sponsoring the Minnesota Forest Fire Prevention Campaign, which will reach a climax April 26, every effort will be made to secure the co-operation of every man, woman and child in protecting the forests from fires this year.

There were 2,400 fires reported in 1929, the worst year in history for forest fires in this state. More than 300,000 acres of land were burned over, causing property damage of nearly $300,000 and costing one life.

Grover M. Conzet, Commissioner of Forestry and Fire Prevention, in discussing the fire situation, says: "More than 99 per cent of the fires are caused by human carelessness. While the 1929 losses were exceptional, the annual devastation of our forest resources is seriously endangering the economic and social welfare of the state. With 6,500,000 acres of fire-devastated, non-producing land, we can not continue very much longer to add a few hundred thousand acres each decade. Only through proper forest management with adequate fire protection and extensive supervision will this condition be improved, thus assuring the future of forestry."

Six reminders on fire prevention are given by Mr. Conzet. Says he: Secure a burning permit from a forest officer; put out the fire before it grows large; report all unattended fires to a forest ranger; do not throw burning cigarettes, cigars or matches; put your camp fire out with water, and see that every one else is careful.

The above picture shows a forest fire scene taken last year. On the right is one of 75 lookout towers used for fire detection. The inset, upper left, shows a lookout man on duty in the tower.

A Sour Stomach

In the same time it takes a dose of soda to bring a little temporary relief of gas and sour stomach, Phillips Milk of Magnesia has acidity completely checked, and the digestive organs all tranquilized. Once you have tried this form of relief you will cease to worry about your diet and experience a new freedom in eating.

This pleasant preparation is just as good for children, too. Use it whenever coated tongue or fetid breath signals need of a sweetener. Physicians will tell you that every spoonful of Phillips Milk of Magnesia neutralizes many times its volume in acid. Get the genuine, the name Phillips is important. Imitations do not act the same!

Diphtheria May Be Eliminated

Modern publicity methods, allied with the application on a vast scale of the latest principles of public health administration, were so effectively used against diphtheria in New York last year that the disease is expected to be extinct there within five years. Such was the purport of the first annual report of the diphtheria commission concerning its work in 1929 under Dr. Shirley W. Wayne, commissioner of health, which pointed out that a half century ago one out of every two contracting the disease died of it.

Egyptian Marriage Contracts

Marriage contracts were in vogue among early Egyptians, according to tablets found in the Nile region by explorers. The earliest known nuptial contract there dates from 590 B. C., the terms of which were drawn by the husband. It has been translated as follows: "Since God willeth that we should unite one with the other in righteous wedlock, after the manner of every free man and every wise woman, therefore I have given thee four dollars in gold as a bridal gift. And for my part I will not neglect thee. Neither shall I put thee forth without a cause, having legal ground. But should I wish to put thee forth, I will pay seventeen dollars for the matter."

It is sometimes easier to make a bluff than it is to stand on it.

—32—

There was nothing circuitous or indirect in the expression with which Ben Inglepin regarded his daughter.

"Ah, lass, you shame me. Egad, you do!" He stooped and kissed her.

"Speak to Fellowes. He's a gentleman, I'll own, and a bulldog, if there ever was one. Chater and—"

"We'll say nothing of Chater, Father," she interrupted. "'Twould have been better for us had we not soiled our case by contact with him."

"Oh, my dear! Don't be hard on Saul. He wasn't choice, I'll grant you, but in his way he helped—"

"Ah, no, he ruined us! But for him Captain Fellowes would not have been pressed. And if—but this is to no purpose. Go below, and see if you can help poor, fat Maria. I'll be with you soon."

"Stay on deck, poppet, and win some color to your cheeks," Ben counseled. "The senora and I can manage."

Fellowes was staring out over the stern—at the same distant spot, which so recently had monopolized Cara's attention, when the girl approached.

"Oh, Miss Inglepin, we—we are indebted to you. To you and your father and your—ah—duenna. Very helpful, Doctor O'Shaughnessy tells me. We should have been badly off without you—the Badger's wounded and everything."

"We were glad to do it, sir," she returned. "But I came to thank you. 'Twas knightly of you—to bury him so—with his flag flying. And I am sorry for what I said this afternoon."

He flushed brick-red.

"'Twas the truth," he muttered. "I have much to answer for. He told me—Collishawe told me—'twas Chater persuaded him to press me—not you. I owe you an apology. I wasn't quite—sane."

"But how could you have been? You were dreadfully wronged, and none the less because 'twas all a tissue of mischance."

"'Tis an evil passion, this hate," Fellowes insisted. "Vexation and sorrow—and death—it has brought to all who crossed my path."

"You exaggerate, sir," she answered soberly. "Surely, 'twas not evil to slay Captain Chater, who would have slain you. And James was your enemy in war. If he must have died, he'd rather have died so."

"Are you become my advocate?" he cried, exasperated—the other officers glanced at him askance. "Well, then, give me an argument in justification of delivering you to Joshua Inglepin's hatred!"

"'Tis unnecessary I should argue with you to do your duty," she replied as soberly as before. "You set your hand to this task. Will you draw back from it?"

"God knows! I—" He was on the point of saying: "I love you! How can I send you to a cell in the Bridewell, a gibbet on the Southwest battery?" When he realized the bare fact he loved her must make him implacable. In honor, he could not favor her. And if he possessed any lingering shreds of pride, he adjured himself in a hot burst of fury, he'd remember she had accepted Collishawe after plighting troth with him.

"I have got myself into this coil," he concluded, strangling his emotion. "'Tis for me to work myself free. But I'd have you know, ma'am, I gain no satisfaction from it."

"How could you, who are not cruel?" she answered tranquilly. "Come, Cuffee, you can aid me shift the wounded men for their ease."

• • • • • • •

Burdened with prisoners and running short of water and food after a six months' cruise, Fellowes was relieved when a wet Easter sent the blockaders scurrying off shore, and the Centurion could venture a landfall. They stood out from the Rockaways, following the beat the Badger had patrolled, and on the verge of darkness sighted the spot of Sandy Hook and came to anchor for the night under the guns of the forts. They were safe! A fat cruise, everyone agreed. The prizes should yield $100,000, at the lowest computation and allowing for the loss of one of the three sent in, what with the gold in the Centurion's strong box and the choicer bits of cargo stowed in the hold. And that meant some $350 in prize money for every seaman.

Of all the crew, Fellowes, alone, was moody, and received indifferently the congratulations of visitors. By his instructions, nothing was said of the capture of the True Bounty, and the Inglepins and their attendant were confined in the after-cabin. They were Joshua's personal share of the spoil, he reflected cynically, they and the tidbit of treason that went with them, and Joshua should be the first to gloat over their humiliation and shame. He'd have nothing to do with it after discharging his duty. Surrender them, give his report—and go Where? Anywhere there was fighting.

He abandoned his reflections when the Inglepins came on deck, the duenna, wrapped in her funeral garments clinging to Cara like a shadow. Both Ben and his daughter looked like people who have shut the past from their minds, who front the future unafraid. Ben nodded pleasantly to Fellowes and Cara enfolded him in one of those compassionate glances which made him writhe inwardly. Why should she pity him? He wanted none of her pity. And annoyed, self-conscious, his expression became wooden and taciturn as he responded to their greetings.

Noggle had the longboat hoisted out. In addition to the oarsmen, Fellowes detailed an armed escort, consisting of Sopher, Eaches, Doak, Cuffee, and Tom, and when they had taken their places he asked the Inglepins to follow them. The duenna was lowered in a lubber seat. Her vast bulk could never have accommodated itself to the Jacob's ladder. And last, he went overside himself, precisely dressed in a fresh uniform, sword and pistols at his belt, the compromising petition Cuffee had found in the True Bounty's anchor-stock folded up in his breast pocket.

His hand crept toward the pocket, rested on his coat-lapel. He toyed with the thought of wrenching the document from its hiding place and casting it into the East river. But Cara's eyes were on him, steady eyes, pitying eyes, and head and hand dropped together. Had she read his purpose? Or was that but fancy, too?

"Faster, men," he urged the rowers hoarsely.

It was only six months since the True Bounty and Centurion had sailed, and the waterfront remembered the gossip that linked the two vessels. And here was Ben Inglepin returning in Joshua Inglepin's brig, with an armed escort in attendance. Cara, her hand on her father's arm, waved to an occasional acquaintance, smiling frankly. The duenna was a shapeless mass, waddling after them. Nimrod Sopher, very important, strode in front. Doak and Eaches marched behind him, and Tom and Cuffee immediately behind the Inglepins and the duenna. Fellowes brought up the rear, denying the requests for information which were showered upon him, as the word spread along the docks—"Hey, the Centurion's in! They got Ben Inglepin 'n' his gal."

Merchants and shopkeepers, hucksters and peddlers, sailors and militiamen, boys, and girls, market women, housewives, maid servants, eddied toward Front street. Far in the rear a brace of fat watchmen hobbled anxiously, inquiring of everyone they met what had happened. In Front street they had an answer:

"Ben Inglepin's in Joshuay's office . . . Joshuay's, I tell ye . . . No, no, not his'n. 'Ain't nobody thar . . . No, ye can't git in. Joshuay's privateersmen won't let ye."

But the watchmen persisted and forced their way to the doorstep.

At that moment Fellowes emerged from the doorway of Joshua Inglepin's office, and the grim, set expression of his features, the competent poise of his lean body, caught the attention of the nearer bystanders. Men craned on tiptoe to catch the few words he spoke.

"You two are watchmen? Then one of you is to go to Government house, and inform Governor Tompkins, with Mr. Joshua Inglepin's compliments, that the Centurion privateer is in, and Mr. Inglepin will be obliged if his excellency will attend here to examine certain matters of importance."

A dozen voices hailed Fellowes. "What's toward, sir?" "Are the British coming in?" "Will they engage the forts?"

"I have no information of that character, gentlemen," Fellowes answered. "As a matter of fact, the blockading squadron was driven offshore by the recent storm."

"Did ye have a good cruise?" called a different group. And one deep voice roared: "What happened to yer foretopmast?"

"We lost it in action with the Badger sloop-of-war," Fellowes returned. And sensing the abrupt tension produced by the statement, went on: "It may interest you to know that we sunk her. We have the survivors of her crew aboard, and among other things I must consult the governor as to their disposition."

A cheer that was almost hysterical acclaimed the news.

Snakes and Prairie Dogs

It is often said that rattlesnakes live in prairie dog colonies, where they dwell in peace with the prairie dogs and with burrowing owls.

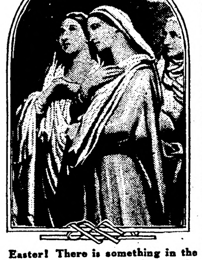
"The peacefulness of this relation," says Dr. Karl P. Schmidt of the Field museum in Chicago, "is certainly open to question, in view of the rattlesnake's fondness for small mammals as an article of diet."

The belief that snakes and prairie dogs live peacefully together is in all probability untrue.—Pathfinder Magazine.

Disseminates Knowledge

The National Geographic society was founded in 1888. The object of the society is to obtain and disseminate geographical knowledge. This is attained in the first instance by members' undertaking distant travels at their own expense in some cases, and in others assisted by the funds of the society or grants from the government; and in the second instance by lectures delivered and works issued under the auspices of the society, or by papers read and commented on at periodical meetings.

The Dawn of Easter



Easter! There is something in the very name that suggests all that the day stands for. Hope, Faith, Resurrection! Its sound carries us back across the centuries to that first glorious Easter morning, when the bereaved women came to the tomb and found that death had been conquered. It brings us a vision of the white-robed angel in the sepulcher, saying to these weeping women: "Be not affrighted: Ye seek Jesus of Nazareth, which was crucified: He is risen; He is not here." And the comfort and hope of the words fill us with joy, for even Nature today re-echoes the words, as we witness the miracle of resurrection all around us. Every field and meadow, every opening bud and blossom, the glory and brightness of the spring day, all bring happy assurance to our heart. All that is beautiful never really dies; each year there is added beauty and loveliness as the world awakens from its winter sleep. And so, too, we feel, that we shall know that endless life and resurrection in that far, fair country that awaits beyond. The promise that He made is still with us, and Easter day, with all its joy and all that it stands for, assures us that it will come true.

WELCOME EASTER

Thy voice of heart and spirit raise,
O, Church of God, with songs
of praise.
Be ever blest, our Easter morn,
When hope was born.

Darkness Dispelled on First Easter Morning

Easter is the promise of the Lord that all the best and noblest in man shall be renewed, even as growth and bloom and ripening shall not cease.

Belief in eternal life compels us to believe in good deeds and honest thought. The good man toils not for today, nor for tomorrow alone, but because he knows that his labor shall survive long after his hand has fallen from the plow. The good man pours himself into the world and makes it new. He is among the blessed who win sight out of blindness, order out of chaos, and life out of death.

Since the first Easter morning the soul of man has shone with unwasting light; for then he looked into the radiant face of the risen Christ and knew that God's universe shapes itself not to destruction but to a yet more glorious genesis; yea, it endureth from everlasting to everlasting.—Helen Keller.

Most Beautiful Festival

The religious observances, past and present, connected with Easter vary, and are innumerable, but primarily they have one idea: the festival of the resurrection of Christ, observing it as the principal feast of the Christian era.

In every home and in every church it is a significant, spontaneous and universally beautiful festival; a day of rejoicing and happiness.

In every pulpit in the world on Easter messengers proclaim that man shall overcome all his enemies, conquering even death itself.

In the story of Gethsemane and the darkness of Calvary and story of Christ triumphant, the world takes new courage and sees goodness and right triumphant over sin and injustice, humility conquering pride and hate cast out by love.

SONG AT EASTER

By Charles Hanson Towne

If this bright lily
Can live once more,
And its white promise
Be as before,
Why can not the great stone
Be moved from His door?

If the green grass
Ascend and shake
Year after year,
And blossoms break
Again and again
For April's sake,

Why can not He,
From the dark and mold,
Show us again
His manifold
And gleaming glory,
A stream of gold?

Faint heart, be sure
These things must be.
See the new bud
On the old tree! . . .
If flowers can wake,
Oh, why not He?
—Woman's Home Companion.

Might of Christianity in the Resurrection

The Easter Gospel, which we celebrate by our greatest religious festival, with its truth of Immortality and Resurrection, is the heart, center and life of Christianity. Paul prays that "I may know Christ and the power of His resurrection."

This great fact has ever been the propelling power of Christianity. Christ was comparatively unknown and was "despised and rejected of men," when He died upon the cross. But when He arose, triumphant over the powers of darkness, death and hell, declaring, "All power is given to me in heaven and on earth," and saying, "Lo, I am with you always!" then His weak and terrified little band of disciples felt themselves imbued with irresistible power.

And in the strength of the Resurrection, and of the leadership of the risen Christ, they carried the great message hither and thither, not to Judea alone, but to the farthest ends of the earth. Their hearts aflame with their mighty Gospel, no persecutions could chill their ardor; neither the jaws of lions, nor the nails of the cross, nor burning faggots of the stake, could silence their testimony.

Easter Ceremonies in Rome Have New Dignity

As though symbolical of the obliteration of old differences between church and state, flowers sent by the governor of Rome adorn the classic cross in the center of the Coliseum where so many Christian martyrs suffered death prior to the advent of Emperor Constantine.

Good Friday observances in all the 400 churches of Rome thus take on a new impressiveness.

The most picturesque is the procession of penitence across Rome to the church of Santa Groce in Gerusalemme where relics of the Savior's passion are exhibited. Many members of the Roman nobility participate in the procession.

All the marchers carry small candles of yellow wax and chant in chorus the canticle, "Long Live the Cross," before entering the church to give homage to the relics of the true cross preserved there.

Easter Finery

Popular observances, superstitions and customs attend on the observance of Easter day. One of these is the donning of fresh and attractive attire; a custom originated in religious ceremonies and changing in form with the years until it now means merely a donning of holiday garments in honor of the happy day. The traditional Easter bonnet is no longer material for the annual joke since the line of demarcation between leaving off the winter hat and putting on the summer one is not regulated by Easter, as it used to be in grandma's day, but is now entirely a matter of style and milady's purse.

Salisbury Cathedral

England's most beautiful cathedral, at Salisbury, has been called England's finest poem in stone. It is indeed the most harmonious and best proportioned of the English cathedrals, for it was built within the short space of forty years (1220-1260), where many others have taken centuries to complete them. It is a pure example of early English architecture, unalloyed by foreign influence. Its spire, rising from the very middle of the church, is the loftiest in England.

FAMILY DOCTOR LEARNED THIS ABOUT CONSTIPATION

Dr. Caldwell loved people. His years of practice convinced him many were ruining their health by careless selection of laxatives. He determined to write a harmless prescription which would get at the cause of constipation, and correct it.

Today, the prescription he wrote in 1885 is the world's most popular laxative! He prescribed a mixture of herbs and other pure ingredients now known as Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, in thousands of cases where bad breath, coated tongue, gas, headaches, biliousness and lack of appetite or energy showed the bowels of men, women and children were sluggish. It proved successful in even the most obstinate cases; old folks liked it for it never gripes; children liked its pleasant taste. All drugstores today have Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin in bottles.

"Brought Back My Strength"

"My little daughter was born on a homestead in northern Alberta. I had four other children and I worked so hard that I suffered a nervous breakdown. The doctor's tonic did not seem to help me and when a friend told me about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, I began to take that instead. I kept on until I felt well again. It brought back my strength. Today I can do anything, thanks to the Vegetable Compound."

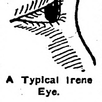
Analyzing ...YOU...

With the New Science of Syllabics

By C. J. COFFMAN
Dean of All the Enumerators

Irene

As the eye indicates our wakefulness, so the first syllable in this name, IR, really signifies the wakefulness of the city. This naturally makes you most adapted to city life, where you will not only be most at home but where your greatest success is almost certain to be found.



A Typical Irene Eye.

Your second syllable, ENE, tells us a lot about singing. This means not only songs of a joyful, happy nature, but the song of triumph, which you will sing because of your watchfulness for opportunity in the city.

Only a few people can succeed, and then be peaceful. You have real ability here, because you avoid the continual urge of ambition, the dynamic drive for more of success and of applause.

The whole word Irene means peace, quietness and rest.

The letter I in your name, like the human eye in your body, is able to radiate great peacefulness among your friends and loved ones. At times this wakefulness may have a dash of fire in it, like that of Irene Bordoni, the French actress and vaudeville artist.

Taking the letters separately in your name I signifies Immaculate, Innocent; R stands for Righteousness and Restoration; E stands for Entre and Entertainment, while N stands for both Nobility and Novelty.

Whatever advice is given you, you will do as you like about following, but the principal bit of advice that you really need is to be kind to your inferiors.

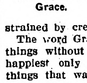
The reason for this is that you have the tendency to attract around inferiors who grow. These may, quite unexpectedly, catch up with you or even go ahead of you.

To you especially applies the conclusion of the little fable about the grasshopper who spurned the acquaintance of the caterpillar, and was afterwards snubbed by the butterfly who had been the caterpillar.

* * *

Grace

Your name begins with G, the seventh letter. To the enumerator this represents God, but to everyone else you will need to bring out the God within you. It is quite probable that you will be deeply religious in your own way, but not easily restrained by creeds or dogmas.



The Eyes of Grace.

The word Grace really means to do things without friction, and you are happiest only when you are doing things that way.

Your deep and studious eyes show the ability to penetrate the thoughts of others. You can mother them, even though you disagree with them.

With an almost unlimited courage you combine a peculiar timidity, a fluttering of heart and mind, like a frightened bird, making almost a paradox in your life.

Taking off the G in your name we find the word RACE. This indicates the speed with which you can accomplish a thing your heart is set upon. It also has a relationship to the pride you take in skill of fingers.

The first three letters of your name, GRA, relate to an old Greek root, to write. In this you will probably find your greatest career. Among the modern Graces who have exemplified this is Grace Coolidge.

Taking off the first two letters of your name gives us the word ACE. This gives you the desire as well as the ability to hold to a single ideal, and to demand the singular possession of what you feel to be your own.

You have one of those peculiar natures that gives you access to what you set your mind upon, but this is curiously restrained by the timidity that I mentioned. Ordinarily you are not lonesome even when alone, your mind is so filled with things to learn and to do.

Go right on courageously then, Grace, knowing that all things come to him who waits, if you continue to labor while you wait.

Checkers' Many Names

In England the game of checkers is known as draughts; in France, Jeu des Dames; Italy, das Damenspiel; Holland, Damrod; Poland, Dama; in the Arabic of Egypt, Damah. The recurrence of the forms of "Dame" is attributed to the fact that part of the board and some of the draughts of Queen Hatass, daughter of Thothmes, who lived in Egypt 1600 B. C., have been found.

Wife Sore as Hubby Returns 13th Time

Elizabeth, N. J.—It wasn't that her husband deserted her 13 times that annoyed Beatrice Karris so much as the fact that he always came back. The husband, Stanley, she told Police Recorder Brown, came back for the 13th time a couple of days ago and raised a row because she wasn't glad to see him. Stanley was held in $300 bond to keep away from his wife.

GROCER WINS IN DEAL WITH CROOK

Sale of Tea Nets Him Cent and Half Profit.

Kansas City.—"May I have a piece of string to tie my bundle?"

"Certainly," William J. Embree, grocer, told the stranger who asked the question.

Work of tying the bundle, which was broken, disclosed a quantity of suit material.

"Present for my brother," explained the man. "Just got here from England, looked for my brother, but he's moved."

"Too bad," sympathized Embree, turning to wait upon another customer who just had entered.

"Ten cents' worth of tea," said this man.

"What have you there?" the customer asked the man who had lost his brother.

The contents of the package was explained in the broad accent of the Englishman.

The customer inspected the cloth. Wanted to buy it. Offered $130 for it.

"I don't like your nationality," the Englishman told the bargainer. "I cawn't sell to you."

The customer took Embree aside. "I'm Goldberg," he said. "Country club plaza tailor. You buy this cloth. It's worth $300. I'll go to my shop and get the money. Give you $25 for making the purchase for me."

But Embre had heard Goldberg ask the Englishman, "You're not going to take that back to New York, are you?"

Nothing previously had been said about New York. Embree was suspicious.

"Nothing doing," he told Goldberg. "I think I'll tell the police about this Englishman." He started for the telephone, his visitors for the door.

Goldberg was carrying the tea, the Englishman his bundle.

"Dime for the tea," said Embree, dialing for police headquarters. It was tossed onto the counter.

The men disappeared as Embree made connections with the police.

"It's an old game," he was told. "Couple of confidence men. Cloth was worth probably $40."

"O. K. with me," Embree replied. "I made a cent and a half profit on the tea."

Pumps Three Days as Sharks Circle Craft

Jacksonville, Fla.—Hero of a strange saga of the sea is Jack Grant, a huge negro employed as one of the crew in a motor cruiser owned by Paul Rice of this city. Grant saved his own life and that of Rice after an explosion disabled the craft far from shore and sprang leaks in the seams of its hull.

For three days and nights without a rest Grant pumped and managed to keep the craft afloat until another vessel happened by. Ten minutes after Grant and Rice were rescued their cruiser sank in 20 feet of water.

Grant and Rice were knocked unconscious, but water lapping at his face revived the negro, although Rice was seriously injured.

Time and again, when it seemed impossible for Grant to continue pumping, he would glance over his shoulder and groan:

"Look at dem sharks, boss!"

Then the water would flow more freely from the small pump while the maneaters continued to circle the craft. Grant was on the point of collapse when the other boat finally reached the spot.

Hot Stove Thrower's Wife Is Given Divorce

Chicago.—If you suddenly saw a hot stove come hurtling through the air at you—how would you feel?

Mrs. Ethel Huseby, 2901 McVicker avenue, appeared before Judge Robert Gentzell complaining about her husband, Marshall.

She married Marshall, a chauffeur for her father's coal, wood and ice company, on March, 1926. They lived happily until October 5, 1929, when Marshall developed this stove mania.

"And he threw this stove—a hot one—right at my client," recited Attorney Irving Eiseman.

Judge Gentzell pondered. Then—

He granted the divorce and directed Marshall to pay $15 a week allimony for the support of his wife, and a daughter, Ethel, aged three.

When Babies CRY

Babies will cry, often for no apparent reason. You may not know what's wrong, but you can always give Castoria. This soon has your little one comforted; if not, you should call a doctor. Don't experiment with medicines intended for the stronger systems of adults! Most of those little upsets are soon soothed away by a little of this pleasant-tasting, gentle-acting children's remedy that children like.

It may be the stomach, or may be the little bowels. Or in the case of older children, a sluggish, constipated condition. Castoria is still the thing to give. It is almost certain to clear up any minor ailment, and could by no possibility do the youngest child the slightest harm. So it's the first thing to think of when a child has a coated tongue; won't play, can't sleep, is fretful or out of sorts. Get the genuine; it always has Chas. H. Fletcher's signature on the package.

Little "Ifs" That Might Have Changed History

The word "if" has been the cause of much reminiscing ever since Adam said, "Oh, if we had never eaten the apple."

Professor Hearnshaw, of London university, has prepared a book called "The Ifs of History," in which he says:

"If Cleopatra's nose had been an eighth of an inch longer she would have failed to excite Julius Caesar or Mark Anthony and the history of the world would have been changed.

"If the battle of Actium had not been fought, the empire of Augustus would not have been established, neither Pontius Pilate nor Herod would have ruled Syria and Rome might have remained a stranger to the Christian faith.

"If the Spanish garrison of Gibraltar had not been so pious as to be attending church when the English troops attacked, the rock would not be in English possession today."

The London Purdah

Katherine Mayo, the distinguished writer, was talking to a group of New York reporters about the campaign of the women of India to abolish the purdah, or shut-in harem life.

"And here," said Miss Mayo, "I'm reminded of a story about the emir of Afghanistan.

"The emir once visited London, and of course a royal dinner party was given in his honor. Well, when all the guests were seated, the emir looked around at the glittering assemblage of princesses and duchesses and countesses and what-not, and then said to King Edward in a loud voice:

"'I see you do the same here as we do in Afghanistan—keep all the pretty ones shut up.'"

Chimes Played by Rain

Children of the vicinity of University high school, Sawtelle, Calif., can hear, when it rains, the chimes in Louis Zwieg's "singing tower." Holes carefully placed in the dome built on the top of the sheet-iron house that this veteran of the Indian war of the late sixties built for himself, permit raindrops to drip down on chimes made of discarded glass lampshades, arranged around a ring of copper tubing. Some who have heard the most pretentious chimes in the country have said this rain-drop-played instrument is better for soft, sweet, melodious tones.

Newlyweds Get Vow Cards

Cards reminding husbands and wives of their marriage vows are being issued by the Mothers' union of England. They are of a size convenient for carrying in the pocket, and are printed in silver and white. They record the date and place of the marriage and the names of the groom and bride, and they reproduce the essential portions of the marriage service which have reference to marital fidelity. It is planned to give a card to every bride and one to every groom at the time of the ceremony.

Happy Woman Tells How She Lost 19 Pounds of Fat in 27 Days

During October a woman in Montana wrote—"My first bottle of Kruschen Salts lasted almost 4 weeks and during that time I lost 19 pounds of fat—Kruschen is all you claim for it—I feel better than I have for years."

Here's the recipe that banishes fat and brings into blossom all the natural attractiveness that every woman possesses.

Every morning take one half teaspoonful of Kruschen Salts in a glass of hot water before breakfast.

Be sure and do this every morning for "It's the little daily dose that takes off the fat."—Don't miss a morning. The Kruschen habit means that every particle of poisonous waste matter and harmful acids and gases are expelled from the system.

At the same time the stomach, liver, kidneys and bowels are toned up and the pure, fresh blood containing Nature's six life-giving salts are carried to every organ, gland, nerve and fibre of the body and this is followed by "that Kruschen feeling" of energetic health and activity that is reflected in bright eyes, clear skin, cheerful vivacity and charming figure.

If you want to lose fat with speed get an 85c bottle of Kruschen Salts from any live druggist anywhere in America with the distinct understanding that you must be satisfied with results or money back.

Paying The Fiddler

"Paying the Fiddler", a comedy-drama in three acts, by Lillian Martimer, amasingly dramatizes one of the most familiar phenomena in American life; the family that lives recklessiy beyond its income.

The castle family is plainly headed for disaster. The crash comes when the spoiled son of the household all but kills a child with his speeding motor car, thereby bringing abour his father's physical and financial collapse.

Together with the financial situation we find interwoven two interesting love affairs between four charming oharacters.

What is the outcome of the Castle affair? Everyone will have an opportunity to see the problem solved at some future date.

The Pride Of Iowa

Iowa dairymen, from Governor Hammill to the humblest farmhand, were downcast today. Miss Jewel Ormsby, pride of Iowa, and in the opinion of dairymen everywhere destined to prove herself the greatest cow ever prodused, has been captured by Minnesota. She has been purchased by F. E. Murphy for his Femco Farms, famous Holstein famous Holstein Breeding establishment located at Breckenridge Minn. This record shattering animal was produced by Hargrove and Arnold, Norwalk, Ia. Jewel is the queen of queens in in the Holstein-Friesian world on the basis of butter records she has been piling up in the past three months. Bigger than most great draft horses, this sensational animal is now producing enough milk to furnish 100 babies with a pint of rich food each day -100 pounds every 24 hours, of which 4.5 percent is pure butterfat.

The congregation welcomes the new members.

First Rain Fell Sunday Night

The first rain of the season fell here on Sunday evening when we got a good soaker. It loosened up the ground and pepped up the grass which appears to have taken to growing at full speed which is indicated by the many green patches one can see now.

The farmers said the shower was a great help as the ground was getting rather dry in spots.

The world is getting "the raspberry" from Minnesota, and it's the kind of raspberry the world likes. It took 6,000,000 certified plants from the state last year. The Lantham, a variety orignated by the University Fruit Breeding Farm, helped to create the demand,

Roosevelt Wants Creamery

According to a news item in the Roosevelt Reporter, the farmers up in that end of Roseau county are trying to establish a cooperative creamery in Roosevelt.

If the boys up there find any difficulty in getting their creamery going, they can take a trip to Holt, the home of the biggest cooperative creamery in Marshall county, and, we know that you can get the dope on how to start a good creamery.

Our creamery has been run successfully for about twenty-four years, and is one of the leading business institution in the county and the backbone of the community it serves.

Rev. and Mrs Redal and family spent the forepart of the week visiting with relatives in Grand Forks,

Move Your Chicks Around

Much trouble from chick diseases can be avoided if moving of chicks, brooder houses and equipment is practiced consistently, says Miss Cora E. Cook. extension specialist in poultry, University Farm ST. Paul. Accordingly she urges the following program,

Move the brooder house onto ground that has not been used by chicks or hens for at least two years.

During the growing season, move the brooder house about 100 feet every two or three weeks to bring chicks to fresh ground. Move feeders and fountains two or three days. Ground around the feeders becomes contaminated very rapidly.

Remove and replace litter often enough to keep it clean. If disease occurs, replce litter at least once a week.

Miss Cook also advices placing feeders and fountains on wire screen platforms so that droppings, spilled water and the like are not permitted to foul the ground immediatly surrounding.

Mr, and Mrs. Art Conklin spent Monday in Thief River Falls. Mr. Conlin purchased a new Ford Town sedan.

Mr and Mrs Oscar Knutson and daughter Eldora, of Humboldt visited with relatives here the week end, returning home Sunday,

W. Fluke of Grand Forks, who purchased a farm west of Holt last summer, is now here making extensive improvements to the buildings on the place. Mr. Fluke expects to move his family here soon.

"Electrocuted"

Leakage of electric currents from high-power transmission lines often causes serious injury to trees, according to tree specialists in the United States Department of Agriculture. Another common type of injury to trees and shrubs is scorching and burning as a result of the plants being located where whitewashed or light-colored walls reflect the heat of the sun. Other types of injury to trees are caused by dense shade or too intense sunlight.

CHAPTER XIV

—33—

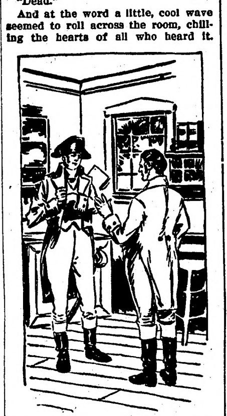
Joshua's Decision

Joshua Inglepin stood in the entrance of his private office as Fellowes ushered the prisoners in from the street. His eyes gleamed like blue agates, his jaw was clamped rigidly; but there was less color than usual in his face, and his neck-cloth was damp with sweat. Ben was debonnair, self-possessed. He regarded Joshua half-humorously, gave him a curt nod and a "'Morning Jos," while Joshua eyed him almost slyly, and appeared to be fumbling for words. Cara, after a single level-eyed stare at her uncle, looked idly out a window at the crowd besieging the warehouse. The duenna stood listlessly, clicking her beads in black-mittened hands.

"Humph," exploded Joshua, clearing his throat. "D—d if you didn't do it, eh, Fellowes? But where's Chater?"

"Dead."

And at the word a little, cool wave seemed to roll across the room, chilling the hearts of all who heard it.



But Joshua Stopped Him by a Gesture.

Joshua's mouth worked for a moment before he spoke again.

"Dead, eh? And the True Bounty?"

"We burned her. I couldn't spare the men to fetch her home."

"Had reason, I suppose?"

"We found what we sought," Fellowes answered, and thrust a hand into the pocket which contained the petition. But Joshua stopped him by a gesture.

"Not out here. Too public—people can see through those windows. Come inside."

He stood back while they filed into the private office, then shut the door after them.

"This is better," he said, in no hurry to accept the paper Fellowes had produced. "By the way! See anything of Collishawe?"

"He's dead," Fellowes replied, wincing. "We sank the Badger."

Joshua beamed.

"This is what I call a thorough job," he exclaimed. "'Tis what comes of hating enough."

The bellow of the crowd had risen louder, and Fellowes made an excuse of it to change the subject.

"We should get rid of those people, sir," he said. "They may be dangerous. And here is the paper. 'Tis important. If—if anything is to be done, the governor should see it immediately."

"Right! Entirely right," agreed Joshua, taking the petition at last. "There ought to be a watchman outside. If there is, tell him I wish the governor to wait upon us. He may assure his excellency 'tis of supreme importance."

Fellowes was heartsick over the situation. Manifestly, Joshua was in no disposition to show mercy; and so soon as the governor came the wheels of justice would commence to grind: deposition, indictment, testimony, affidavit, summation, charge, all leading up to the inevitable verdict—and sentence. And he could do nothing, merely sit and view the tragedy, which was the consequence of his own deeds. Himself, as he had said to Cara, the real executioner.

Joshua had just finished reading the petition to Lord Liverpool. The paper trembled in the merchant's hand; he glared triumphantly at his brother and niece, but he quickly looked away from Cara. Not easy, even for so stout a hater as Joshua Inglepin, to enjoy gloating over the frail gallantry of that slim figure in the saffron-yellow gown.

"Damme, 'tis the brains of the federalist party, Fellowes," Joshua greeted the Long Islander, and there was a noticeable quaver in his voice. "We've got 'em all—in one noose. We'll wipe 'em out."

"They'd wipe themselves out, if you but let them be. Any party stupid enough to father a paper like that can never last."

"Stupid is right," Joshua agreed. "Devilish stupid. Just what I'd expect of Ben's friends." He leered contemptuously at his brother. "Always over-reaching yourself, Ben."

Cara exclaimed, with a cutting contempt that brought a blush to Joshua's cheeks:

"Neither my father nor I would seek to evade responsibility for what we have done, sir; but we are one in regretting we launched a plan which might have harmed our country, although that is perhaps to be questioned."

Joshua regarded her sourly.

"'Perhaps to be questioned!' To have seceded with New England and factions in York and Jersey? And under protection of the Crown? Egad, young woman, you're an optimist! At the least, 'twould have lost us the war."

"'Twould have ended the war," she corrected him, keeping her temper. "One part of our plan was to insist the British must not take advantage of our efforts. We desired no more than their support against aggression from the federal government. And we were persuaded that hostilities would cease instantly, and a peace be negotiated."

"Aye, and the British would have gobbled you up—and the rest of us, later," fumed Joshua. "A divided republic is a helpless republic."

Cara sighed.

"However honest was our purpose, sir," she said, "we came to see 'twas unfair, in that it struck from behind at other Americans, who were exposing their lives for what they believed right."

A sneer twisted Joshua's lips.

"So?" he answered. "And how chanced this wondrous metamorphosis?"

For the first time she was embarrassed. And it was her father who answered the question.

"We are indebted to Captain Fellowes and his officers and men for that, Jos." He smiled slightly. "After all, we are Americans, Cara and I. We couldn't see Americans fighting as they fought, and escape a sense of obligation to them. Some died for the flag, and 'tis as much my flag as yours. You Democrats have no more claim to it than we Federalists."

Joshua appealed to Fellowes.

"A likely yarn, captain! A bid for sympathy, damme!"

"We want none of your sympathy," Cara flared at him before Fellowes could speak. "We are not ashamed of what we have done. We are sorry—if you can understand that. But we are not ashamed or unwilling to stand our punishment. We were wrong, that is all. And you will do a wicked thing, if you visit upon all those men—" she pointed to the petition, "the vengeance of party feeling. They are not to blame for it. Nor is my father. 'Twas my plan in the beginning, and 'twas I who obtained the support of ministers in London for it. No, no, Father! You can't deny me. 'Tis the truth. Aye, and Captain Fellowes knows it for the truth. He saw me with Lord Wellington in Lisbon."

Great Soldier's Birthmonth

The merry month of May gave many great men to the world. To Ireland it gave the duke of Wellington. When the lads and lasses of the land were dancing round the Maypoles and the cottages were all bedecked, Milady of Mornington house in Dublin was delivered of her fourth son. She did not think, when the nurse brought in the red-faced, puckery little atom, that he was to be the conqueror of England's greatest foe, that he was to be honored by his country and by his sovereign as man is seldom honored. . . . It never occurred to her, for example, that one day, the queen of her country would name a child after this red-faced, puckery little thing the nurse brought in. . . .

Yet all these things came to be. Which proves that May has many secrets up her flowery sleeve and you never know when she is going to drop one.—Exchange.

Tulips in Holland

The miles and miles of bulb fields in Holland are a rare sight in spring. But the Dutch grower is no sentimentalist; the bulb fields would soon disappear, an unprofitable industry, if he did not send his workers out, day by day, to cut off the full bloooms and thereby strengthen the bulbs for future flowering. The tourist is welcome to as many flowers as he can carry away from the "refuse pile" beside every patch.

Mr. Critchlow wants County and State Agencies everywhere to make $200 to $750 a month. He offers to send 1 to introduce. Write him today.

Woman, 23, Is Given Her Third Divorce

San Francisco, Calif.—Holding what is believed the record for divorces at twenty-three years of age, Mrs. Helen Spellman walked from Superior court here freed from her third husband. She sought an interlocutory decree from John W. Spellman, an auto salesman, because he answered her questions with blows when he came home late at night.

PROVES TOO SMART FOR CARD SHARPS

Prospective Victim, Suspicious, Calls Police.

Kansas City.—What police says was a scheme to mulct Harry J. Wheeler, secretary of the Southwest Securities company, Southwest boulevard and Broadway, of $10,000 was foiled here when the prospective victim became suspicious, notified authorities, and the latter arrested four alleged confidence men.

Wheeler several days ago was approached by a man who gave his name as Roy C. Cline and who said that he was guardian for Ray Mosher, reputed to be a wealthy Oklahoma Indian, who was desirous of purchasing an apartment building for $80,000 or $90,000.

Negotiations for the sale of the apartment building progressed for several days until Wheeler went to Cline's room, 731 Ambassador hotel, where he met Cline, Mosher, and two other men giving the names of Sam Johnson and Frank Moss.

While there, Wheeler told police, some one proposed they start a poker game. In the play which followed, Wheeler lost $200. As he departed, he said, Cline drew him aside and suggested that he return to the Ambassador, bringing $10,000 with him. Another poker game would be proposed, he was told, and Cline, Johnson, and Moss would assist him in relieving Mosher of his apartment building money.

Wheeler notified police of the proposal made to him by Cline and arranged for them to enter the hotel room while the poker game was in progress.

Wheeler kept the appointment. The game started and, as before, the cards ran against Wheeler. He had lost $400 before the police entered.

In the confusion Wheeler picked up an empty quart bottle. It descended on Mosher's head.

Police took Mosher and his three companions to police headquarters for investigation. There it was said that all four of them have records as confidence men.

Wheeler still has the apartment building for sale.

When searched at police headquarters Mosher had a $100 bill wrapped around numerous pieces of white paper cut exactly the size of the currency to give it the appearance of a "big roll." Cline had told Wheeler that Mosher would sit in the poker game with approximately $40,000.

The money Wheeler lost in the second game had been marked by him before he entered Cline's room at the Ambassador. He claims the four men were using a small mirror attached to a finger nail file to detect the cards he held.

Hen Saves Her Life by Laying at Right Time

Burlington, Wis.—Amelia is a hen. Yes, and more than a hen. She is an actress. Her parts in the cackling and strutting scenes of home talent production have endeared her in the hearts of Burlington theatergoers.

But of what value is a hen actress hailed as another Duse, if she never has laid a single egg? That thought entered the mind of Albert Weller, Amelia's owner.

Armed with an ax Weller, against the protests of Amelia's public, marched defiantly toward the chicken coop determined to annihilate the hen who refused to lay an egg.

Perhaps some telepathic sense reposes beneath Amelia's comely comb. At any rate when Weller approached the coop the hen cackled proudly. There, gleaming white and pearl-like in their newness, lay two eggs.

Weller spared the ax and Amelia has shown gratitude by keeping up the "act."

Watchman Finds His Feet Frozen to Ground

Kenosha, Wis.—Herman Piehl, factory watchman, was frozen out of his shoes when the mercury dropped 15 below zero here. He tried to thaw a frozen padlock by pouring a kettle of hot water on it. The water ran around his feet, freezing his shoes firmly to the ground. Piehl unlaced his shoes, stepped from them, and ran in his stocking feet for another pair.

Filling Station Man Sells Aspirin; Fined

Kingman, Kan.—J. F. Cheatum, who owns a string of gasoline service stations in this city, believes in giving the public what they want. Motorists asked his attendants if they had aspirin tablets for sale. When the demand increased he placed them on sale. State officers investigated and found he had no license to sell drugs. His fine was $1,000.

Mayor on Crossing Duty

Emulating Napoleon, who took up a sleeping sentry's musket and walked the post, Mayor Mackey of Philadelphia assumed the role of traffic officer when he found the policeman missing from the intersection of Fifteenth and Chestnut streets. He was prompted by an unidentified motorist whose machine narrowly missed the Mackian coat tails. After telephoning police headquarters, Mayor Mackey directed traffic for the minutes between 1:15 and 1:40 p. m. A police inspector reached the scene a moment before the traffic officer, who had "stepped away for a minute to get a drink of water." The mayor spoke to the latter in earnest fashion and then departed.

Nervous, Could Not Sleep—Weak, All Fagged Out

St. Paul, Minn.—"I would say to all women who are nervous, take Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, there is nothing that will build up the nerves like this medicine. I was rundown, my nerves were so weak and upset that I could not sleep, felt so weak and all fagged out that I was not in shape to do anything that required strength. I took two bottles of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, I was feeling like a new woman, my nerves were strengthened so I could sleep and get my rest and I was built up generally." — Mrs. Tillie Gibford, 555 Canada St. Dealers.

Walter Stern, business manager of Universal City, is teaching the rudiments of business and finance to his daughter, Barbara. The other day he sent her to the store for some beef, but to his surprise, she came back empty-handed.

"You don't mean to say the butcher had no beef?" demanded Walter curiously.

"I didn't ask him," said Barbara. "You see, just when I went in the door he sold an ox-tail to some man and I knew that was the last of the animal."—Los Angeles Times.

I got an appetite and can sleep much better, I am not so nervous as I was. I have six children and do all my own work. I can do so much more now than I could when I began taking the Vegetable Compound and I shall certainly recommend your medicine whenever I have an opportunity."—Mrs. John Osborn, R. #2, Box 216, La Junta, Colorado.

POSTMEN ASSIST IN TESTING SOLES

Help Chemists Determine Wearing Qualities.

Washington.—Every one knows that a postman is hard on shoes, so when chemists in the United States Department of Agriculture wanted help in an experiment to determine the relative wearing qualities of sole leather tanned by different processes they asked postmen in Washington to wear the test shoes.

There are two common ways of tanning leather—vegetable tanning and chrome tanning. In recent years attempts have been made to combine the two methods so as to get the desirable qualities of each. The product is known as chrome retanned leather. To get data on the actual wearing qualities those in charge of the experiment had each postman wear one shoe half-soled with vegetable tanned and the other half-soled with chrome retanned leather.

Results of the experiment showed that the chrome retanned leather wore longer than the vegetable tanned leather, in some cases almost twice as long. Certain objections, however, were found to the chrome retanned leather. Leather tanned by this process absorbs water much more rapidly than that tanned by the vegetable process, and proved to be slippery on wet pavements. When chrome leather is heavily retanned its objectionable features are lessened, but in the experiment it was found that its wearing qualities were likewise decreased.

To insure accuracy in results six hides were divided into halves and the mated soles were cut from identical positions. The number of hours each pair of shoes was worn was carefully recorded. No waterproofing treatment was used for any of the leather in the experiment.

Lady Luck Turns Joke on Male Bridge Fiends

Edenton, N. C.—Lady Luck is fickle, some say, but looks out for other women. Here is a story of women, gossip, bridge, Lady Luck and marbles.

Two Edenton men are bridge fiends. Their wives furnish the opposition and gossip during bridge games. A trumped ace is no error and is passed with a yawn by the women. The scores of the Monday night game were one-sided. The men claimed they needed an adding machine for their scores.

Once a week, for almost four years, the husbands defeated their wives at bridge. Their wives cared naught. The men met in an Edenton store and planned revenge, because they could not glory in their victories.

The husbands decided to buy a bag of big marbles. When they defeated their talking mates at bridge they planned for each to toss his wife a bag of marbles, and tell her to learn to play the children's game.

The game of revenge came. Lady Luck, a woman, too, smiled on the women partners. They won.

The husbands are playing marbles and complaining of Lady Luck, lady talk and all ladies in general.

Beatty Uses Hat Tilt to Escape Headache

London.—It is not a striving after notoriety or a love of the bizarre that prompts Admiral of the Fleet Beatty to wear his hats and caps at a jaunty angle.

The famous tilt which the titled sailor favors is due to a cranial conformation which makes the wearing of a hat "on the level" most painful.

This fact is revealed by Lieut. Com. Geoffrey Rawson in his unofficial biography, "Earl Beatty: Admiral of the Fleet."

Efforts to wear his cap in an orthodox manner caused severe headaches, and he finally evolved the "Beatty tilt," which is known all over the world.

Church Marks Birthday With Aviation Stunts

New York.—St. James' Methodist Episcopal church will celebrate its one hundredth birthday with a five-day "aerial offertory," its pastor, Rev. George Machin Stockdale, announced.

The "aerial offertory" will take place at New York airport from April 23 to 27 and the program will include stunt flying, wing walking and parachute jumping.

Eight girls, members of the choir, will be among the jumpers.

Imprisoned Horses Eat Manes and Tail in Barn

Forsyth, Mont.—Accidentally imprisoned for two weeks in a barn, 14 horses consumed each others' tails and manes to fight off approaching starvation. In addition they attempted to eat wire and lumber. When the owner, George Deniger, located his missing animals one was dead, four were dying, and the remaining nine were in a serious condition.

BIBLE CONTINUES BEST SELLING BOOK

Fourteen Million Purchased in U. S. Last Year.

New York.—Fourteen million Bibles and Testaments were sold in the United States last year, according to statistics of the American Bible society and leading Bible publishers. The estimated total for 1929 purchases for the world is 3,500,000. Since October when the revised Episcopal Prayer book was published, 1,500,000 copies of the Prayer book have been sold, according to figures gathered by the National Association of Book Publishers.

Commenting on these statistics of Bible and Prayer book sales, Edward S. Mills, president of the National Association of Book Publishers, said: "The fact that the Bible is still the world's best selling book seems to disprove the contention of many that general interest in religion is on the wane. Another evidence of universal concern with religious problems is the large number of religious books issued by American publishing houses each year. Of the 10,187 new books and new editions issued in the United States during 1929, 806 were religious books.

One Family Bible Passe.

"The only two groups which exceeded religious publications were fiction, which totaled 2,142, and children's books, totaling 931. Biography, which is recognized as one of the most popular classes of literature at the moment, totaled 738 in 1929, 68 less than the religious book total. In the last five years 4,316 religious books have been published, and religious titles have been either second or third on the list of classifications each year. It is interesting to note that in 1920 and 1910 religious books stood fourth on the list; in 1900 sixth.

"One reason for the large sales of Bibles is the modern church teacher's insistence on each member of the household having his own Bible. The old tradition of one family Bible is passe. A wide variety of editions and prices are now available—children's Bibles, reference Bibles, beautifully illustrated editions. A recent innovation in Bible publishing is the substitution of colored bindings, rich reds, purples and blues, for the somber black which was considered the only suitable binding for so many years. Another striking change is brought about by the use of bold face type in some editions, which is considered more readable than the lighter types.

Bibles as Gifts.

"Books on the relation of religion and science have had large sales recently and books giving a spiritual interpretation of the universe are eagerly sought by the reading public. Biographies of religious leaders, books on the problems of the church in the modern world and on comparative religions are also popular. Many general book stores now have active departments specially devoted to the display of religious books, and a great many volumes are sold by the denominational stores throughout the country. There is a strong demand for books in this field during the Lenten season and for Easter gifts."

Judge's Charge to Jury Sets a Brevity Record

Valdosta, Ga.—Judge Bascom S. Deaver of the United States court made a record for these parts in the brevity of a charge to a federal grand jury.

Everybody was prepared to hear a charge dealing with the affairs of the district, with particular reference to the prohibition law. But Judge Deaver surprised all hands when his charge consisted of these 27 words:

"Gentlemen, you will investigate violations of the laws of the United States. You will fix your own hours. The district attorney will assist you. You may retire."

And that was all. Prospective jurors hereabouts are hoping that a precedent has been established.

Childhood Sweethearts Reunited in Old Age

Columbus, Ohio.—Childhood sweethearts were reunited after a half-century here when John Fischer, seventy-four, and Mary Knifer, seventy-one, got a marriage license at the courthouse.

Parted by a quarrel years ago, each married another sweetheart and both reared families. Fischer has eight children and Mrs. Knifer, two.

LIGHTS of NEW YORK

By GRANT DIXON

Worried

A certain theatrical producer who is the proprietor of one of Broadway's more intelligent plays is worried these nights. He stands out front at theater time and watches his audience file in. "Too many high hats, too many high hats," he mutters. His philosophy is that a play that draws a high-hat patronage is doomed to a comparatively short run. "I'd rather see more people from the Bronx," he says.

* * *

Some Don'ts

If you are an out-of-towner in New York for a short visit, and have a limited amount of time to devote to show-going, here's a tip: Don't buy tickets to the final performance of a big success. When a show has been running for a year or so, the final performance is, naturally, something that the actors look forward to with pleasure. It means a rest, or, if the show is going on tour, a change of scenery. So the last show is very likely to be hilarious. If a scene in the play calls for liquor drinking, real liquor may be used. If the show is a revue, the actors "ad lib" their lines, and sometimes aren't so funny.

I attended the last showing of one of the best of the revues the other night, and had a miserable time. The stars' friends were prominently seated down front, and they had a gorgeous time tossing pennies, bursting balloons and talking to the players. It was great fun for them and the cast, but nothing to pay $6.00 a seat for.

* * *

First Nighter

At a premiere performance the other evening a well known man about town, as the phrase goes, arrived under the theater marquee in his town car. He stepped out, and so did his chauffeur. The man about town gave the chauffeur a pair of tickets, and that menial strolled in to see the show. His employer drove the car away.

* * *

Famous Men

In the electric lights over a playhouse featuring a musical comedy are usually to be found, in addition to the name of the show and the names of its stars, the names of those who wrote it. Thus, we may read: "By Rodgers and Hart," or, "Book by Herbert Fields."

After what happened the other day, I wonder if these credits to authors and composers mean anything to the general public. A reporter for a certain newspaper wrote a story about George Gershwin—a story which took it for granted that everyone knows who Gershwin is. The managing editor told the reporter he had taken too much for granted, and the reporter put up an argument.

* * *

Such Is Fame

To settle the dispute they agreed to interview the staff on the subject of Gershwin. Reporters, of course, were left out—for these gentlemen are pretty well informed. They asked the telephone operators, the office boys, the artists and the secretaries about Gershwin. Only one in six knew who he was.

One telephone operator said: "Sure, I know who he is. He's a violinist." An artist said: "Why, he's a composer. He wrote 'Yes, We Have No Bananas.'" So it is my belief that the public doesn't care a hoot about names. It may remember that Jack Donahue is in one show and Fred Stone in another, but it can't be bothered with remembering who else appears, who produced the show, and who wrote it.

Will Bars Drinking by Heirs to Fortune

Los Angeles.—Abstinence from liquor and tobacco is the price the heirs of the late Francis J. Struck, of Los Angeles, must pay if they desire their share of his $100,000 estate.

"If any of my heirs become drunkards or marry drunkards, they will be cut off and their share will be divided among the sober ones," a codicil said. A warning against the use of tobacco was contained in another section.

Advocate Color in Soccer

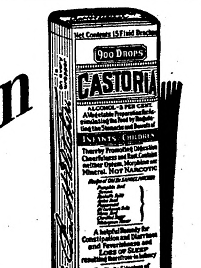
London.—A plea for brighter soccer is made by a group of London fans, who note that no team has selected dark brown as its color because it is not easily picked out, and therefore suggest that the football itself should be painted green, yellow or red.

Hen Works Overtime

Woburn, Mass.—A Rhode Island Red hen owned by Mrs. Frank L. Hawkes recently laid an egg nine inches long and seven and one-half inches in circumference. Inside the shell was a normal sized egg, shell and all, and an extra yolk.

It's Illegal to Wear Sweetie's Frat Pin

Madison, Wis.—Scores of co-eds at the University of Wisconsin face fines and jail sentences for wearing the boy friend's fraternity pin. A state law, nearly fifty years old, forbids any person to wear the badge or other insignia of a fraternal, social, or service organization to which that person does not belong.



Restless Children

Children will fret, often for no apparent reason. But there's always one sure way to comfort a restless, fretful child. Castoria! Harmless as the recipe on the wrapper; mild and bland as it tastes. But its gentle action soothes a youngster more surely than some powerful medicine that is meant for the stronger systems of adults.

That's the beauty of this special children's remedy! It may be given the tiniest infant—as often as there is any need. In cases of colic, diarrhea, or similar disturbance, it is invaluable. But it has everyday uses all mothers should understand. A coated tongue calls for a few drops to ward off constipation; so does any suggestion of bad breath. Whenever children don't eat well, don't rest well, or have any little upset—this pure vegetable preparation is usually all that's needed to set everything to rights. Genuine Castoria has Chas. H. Fletcher's signature on the wrapper. Doctors prescribe it.

Odd Electrical Discharge

St. Elmo's fire is the glow accompanying the brushlike discharges of atmospheric electricity which usually appear as a tip of light on the extremities of pointed objects, such as a church tower or the masts of ships, during stormy weather. It is commonly accompanied by a crackling or fizzing noise. The name St. Elmo is an Italian corruption through Sant' Ermo of St. Erasmus, the patron saint of Mediterranean sailors, who regard St. Elmo's fire as the visible sign of his guardianship.

Ruins of an old Roman wharf, where no doubt the emperors' pleasure galleys were once moored, have been found at Lake Nemi.

Says Men Want Pals, Not Patients!

SHE was engaged! She was the happiest girl in the world. A round of teas and parties, a whirl of pleasure, and she began to wonder what was the matter. Too tired to go out—and he—was he becoming tired of her?

It was at this point that Miss Margaret Belden of Los Angeles woke up to the fact that something had to be done about it. "Men want pals, not patients" she writes. "I went right to my doctor. Do you know what he said? Rest—and Nujol!

"With a prayer in my heart and Nujol in my medicine cabinet I began to fight back to being the healthy, robust, happy girl I had been before. Two months passed. No more tears—no more worrying, no more bad dreams. Today I beat him on the tennis court, and although he can out-swim me, I make him work doing it. It's good to be happy. It's good to be free, physically, and be able to share, any time, in sports or dancing or anything else with the one you love!"

Here's another one who has learned that the simplest and surest way to be well and full of good spirits is to clear the bodily poisons out of your system regularly. Not with powerful drugs, but normally, naturally, easily. Doctors and nurses recommend such a natural treatment as Nujol, because this crystal-clear liquid isn't a medicine at all! It cannot harm even a little baby! It contains absolutely no drugs. It is simply internal lubrication that your body needs like any other machine.

Good looks and good spirits—do they spell popularity? You know they do! Get a bottle of Nujol tonight in any drug store. *Sold in sealed packages only—trademarked "Nujol." Insist on Nujol by name. It costs but a few cents—and it will make you feel like a million dollars.

Relaxations

"Do you think a man of great public responsibility ought to permit himself the diversions of ordinary humanity?"

"Certainly," replied Senator Sorghum. "There is nothing more sensible than a little nonsense at the right time and place."

The feminine styles in 1890 were not pretty, but there have been many that were.

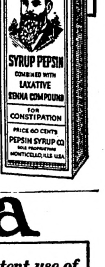
Hopeless One

"Where are you going now?" demanded the Missus as old Di picked up his lantern and cane.

"I'm going out to search for a married man who admits his wife's backseat driving is a great help to him in guiding the car," he sighed.

After a man says, "I'll think it over," nothing ever happens.

None hate, but many fear truth.



Doctor's PRESCRIPTION when system is sluggish; costs nothing to try

When your bowels need help, the mildest thing that will do the work is always the sensible choice. Take a laxative that a family doctor has used for all sorts of cases of constipation. Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin is so pleasant to the taste, so gentle in its action, it is given children of tender age and yet it is just as thorough and effective as stronger preparations. Pure senna, and harmless laxative herbs; ingredients that soon start a gentle muscular action. Avoid a coated tongue, bad breath, bilious headaches, etc. Every drug store has Dr. Caldwell's famous prescription in big bottles. Or just write Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, Monticello, Ill., for a free trial bottle.

Try This Test on Your Separator

Setting aside a glass of skimmilk to await the rising of any cream in it to the top is the least efficient and least accurate way that can be used to determine the amount of butterfat lost in skim milk, says the De Laval Bureau of Dairying. When cows are in certain periods of lactation or eating dry feeds in the winter months, cream may be present in the skim milk and yet not show at the top of the glass. Depending on this kind of test to determine the efficiency of his cream separator, a farmer may be losing from 5 one-hundredths to 15 one-hundredths of one per cent butterfat and never know that the poor separator is causing him to lose from $12 to $36 worth of butterfat a year.

Reskimming skimmilk to test the efficiency of the separator.

The most practical, positive way to test skimming efficiency—the best way to catch the cream thief—is to take five gallons of skim milk from a separator and reskim it in a good separator. This method produces the evidence and shows the farmer how much butterfat he is feeding to his hogs and chickens. If the owner of the cream-stealing separator will take the cream recovered by the good separator and have it tested by the Babcock test, he will likely find his year losses on butterfat, in a herd of six cows, are four or five times more than enough to pay the annual cost of owning a dependably accurate separator of the highest type.

NOTICE OF REAL ESTATE MORTGAGE FORECLOSURE SALE

Notice is hereby given that default has been made in the conditions of that certain mortgage dated March 28th, 1924, executed by Ole J. Nybo and Anna Nybo, his wife, as mortgagors, to the State of Minnesota, as mortgagee, filed for record in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for Marshall County, State of Minnesota, on May 10th, 1924, at three o'clock P. M., and duly recorded in Book "120" of Mortgages, on page 361 thereof; that default consists in the failure to pay the semi-annual installments of amortized principal and interest for $125.00 each, due on September 28th, 1929, and March 28th, 1930, respectively; and to pay the taxes on the hereinafter described mortgaged premises; that under the terms thereof there is actually due and claimed to be due on said mortgage, at the date hereof, the sum of $3,722.13, unamortized principal, together with interest thereon from March 28th, 1930, at the rate of five and one-fourth per cent. per annum, the sum of $250.00, amortized principal and interest, with interest on $125.00 thereof since September 28th, 1929, and on $125.00 thereof since March 28th, 1930, each at the rate of seven per cent. per annum; and the sum of $247.70 for taxes, including interest and penalties, with interest thereon at the rate of seven per cent. per annum since January 6th, 1930, in all the sum of $4,231.41, including interest on said respective sums from said respective dates and at the respective rates as aforesaid; that no action or proceeding at law or otherwise has been instituted to recover the debt secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof; that pursuant to the power of sale in said mortgage contained, said mortgage will be foreclosed and the lands and premises therein described, lying and being in Marshall County, Minnesota, to-wit:

Congressman Selvig Writes

Presidents Budd, of the Great Northern, and Donnelly, of the Northern Pacific, were in Washington, recently, to explain to Minnesota congressmen the virtues of the proposed merger of those two railroads. It would let out 2,300 employees, save ten million dollars a year in expenses but provide no better service and no reduction in rates. On that basis I am opposed to it.

I am rather unhappy about the tariff bill. As it is likely to be passed it will be an industrial tariff, with agriculture getting the best deal it ever it ever had, but still being left out in the cold for the most part. It will not redeem the platform promises of the Republican party or the Democratic party and is not the kind of tariff bill President Hoover asked for in his message to Congress. It will not bring parity between agriculture and industry. It is a step forward in that direction, but to short a step to suit me. The two hundred increases in agricultural rates will put considerable money into the pockets of the farmers, but the nine hundred increases in the industrial schedules will siphon most of it out again in the increased cost of things farmers must buy.

On April 4, 1929, butter was selling at 45 cents per pound in New York, and an average of 35 cents in London market. On April 3, 1930, butter was selling at 38 cents on the New York market and an average of 28 cents a pound in the London market. So the relative difference of value that existed a year ago has been re-established, but on a basis of the world market price is believed to be largely due to the distressing distressing unemployment situation in Great Britain.

The Farm Board has adopted acreage reduction as a permanent policy. That is not objectionable if they will enforce it against Pacific coast soft wheat and southern winter wheat as well as against the spring wheat of the northwest. We do not produce a surplus of spring wheat, and do not export it, and the big reduction, if a reduction has to come, should be in the acreage of the other varieties.

C. G. Selvig.

School Notes

The Holt section held its Declamatory Contest in Holt, Apr. 25 and Play Day was held at Sunnyside Apr. 26.

The Declamatory Contest was well attended and all schools were represented. In class A Loyd Larson won first, Marles Sorter second and Phyllis Inman third.

R. J. Vieths conducted the contest. Miss Ronglie, Mrs. Fricker and C. Overum acted as judges.

All schools in the section were represented at play day and a list of winners will appear in a later issue.

We hope to see the people of Holt and community turn out and come to the schoolhouse tonight and tomorrow night, Friday and Saturday, May 2nd—3rd, to see our big play "Paying The Fiddler".

A Bad Mistake

Senator Wheelor told a story in the course of a Senate debate, of a young man in Montana under examination for citizenship papers who answered most of the questions correctly until the Judge asked, Who is President of the United States? Al Smith, was the prompt reply. What makes you think Al Smith is President? Well, replied the applicant, all I know about it is that the Republican Orators told us that if Al Smith was elected we would have general panic in the country, that prices in Wall Street woulk drop, and that men would be out of employment, that the farmers would go broke and the banks would fail. All of these things have happened so I think Al Smith must be president of the United States.——Ex.

N. S. A. News

A number of important special cources and meetings will be held at the Northwest School and station, Crookston, during the coming summer.

This series of meetings will open with the annual Junior Short Course June 9-12 when 4-H Club members from all points in Northwestern Minnesota will be in attendance. H. A. PFlughoeft, district club leader will be assisted by members of the Northwest School staff together with Miss Laura Gerber, representing the State Unit of the National Dairy Council, and MissMildred Schenck, University Farm, St. Paul, Peterson, in addition to Mr. Kiser and Mr. Christgau of the local station. Thirty-two baby beeves that have been on feed during the winter will be on display.

June 16 to 19 has been designated as Women's Camp Week, when mothers from thirteen Northwestern Minnesota counties will enjoy a week of rest, recreation and instruction.

The annunl alumni reunion will follow on June 28, and the Special Crops and Soils Day program scheduled for July 21. R. S. Dunham and E. R. Clark will direct the Crops and Soils Day Activites,

Sam Lorentson has been busy the past week, rebuilding part of the old Reierson store building for an office and show room for his new Standard Oil filling station which he will put in on the corner in a few days. He has had several carpenters help him with the work and, as it looks now he is going to have an up-to-date place.

C. L. Sandberg has constructed a new office building for his filling station which he will have near his lumber yard. He also expects to have his finished in a short time.

Elected Superintendent

The local board of education made it known last week that they have elected R. B. Perry, superintendent of schools at Borup, Minn., to head the local school the coming year. Mr. Perry comes to us highly recommended and every one in our community should feel that the board has made a good selection.

Indians Revive Tribal Custom

Osages Observe Old Religious Ceremony in Naming Baby.

Pawhuska, Okla.—A child-naming ceremonial recently observed at an Osage Indian settlement near Gray Horse, Okla., was a deeply religious event, which perhaps will not be repeated many more times. There now remain less than 300 full-blooded members of a tribe that came to Oklahoma 56 years ago 4,000 strong.

It is very seldom that the eyes of a white man are permitted to view one of these symbolical affairs. The full-blooded baby came through the ceremony smiling. Its hair had been cut after a prescribed fashion, implying a permit to the Great Spirit that it should live to see old age without obstruction of any kind; in fact, the head was shaved except for a fringe around the lower edges.

The sun was traveling downward in the afternoon when the chief medicine mixer received a call from Baby Wa's copper-colored daddy that he possessed sufficient blankets for gifts to pass around the circle. At sunrise on the day following a recital of the Taking of Life Symbols was given before a large assemblage of full-blooded Indians at the home of Baby Wa's parents. The medicine chief, after chanting the symbols, proceeded to decorate himself from a paint pot with sacred colors, fastened to his scalp lock a red feather and wrapped himself in a radiant-hued blanket.

Symbolic Articles Used.

Father and mother of the child to be given a name were seated in the east end of their great frame home, the chief medicine man and his dozen or more helpers sat on the south side, and visiting clansmen were seated on the north side. When all had settled to their proper places and the center of the room was a great hollow square, symbolical articles to be used in the ceremony were passed around. These consisted of cedar fronds or branches, a bowl of mashed corn and bowl of water. The medicine men then began chanting what they termed the wigie, a translation being: "You will give heed to see what can be done. Even as these words are being spoken to the first division of heaven, the messenger verily descended, where the little ones have not yet become people."

After this sing-song, which lasted an hour, the baby was given over to the head medicine chief, who, in turn, passed him to six lesser chiefs, and then returned him to their leader, who dipped the tips of his fingers into a bowl of water in which had been placed sacred paint and red cedar fronds.

Six Chiefs Participate.

The head chief then gently touched the lips, head, arms and body of the little one. This act was an appeal to grant health and strength that the child would grow to old age without interruption by disease.

Then the baby was turned over to the head of another medicine clan, who touched the head, arms, lips and body of the child with pounded corn; an act of appeal that the child would not suffer for lack of food during life.

After each of the six chiefs of as many medicine clans had handled the child in the same manner, the head of the medicine clan brought the mother forward and placed in her hands two little willow sticks, each of which repsentented a sacred name. She was requested to take one of the names represented by the sacred sticks. She chose the name she believed to be most euphonious and religious in its significance. This closed the ceremony and Wa-shta-ge-was then was a real Indian personage, a clansman and perhaps some day he may become a chieftain.

Girls to See West

Missoula, Mont.—Mary Howe, East Pepperell, Mass., girl, whose hitch-hiking trip to western Montana induced a nation-wide search last summer, is coming West again; but this time she will not be alone. Mary plans to lead a bevy of girl acquaintances into the wild West so they can see for themselves if her descriptions of the beauty and charm of western Montana were exaggerated.

USE HUMAN EAR AS RADIO RECEIVER TO AID THE DEAF

Discovery of Austrian Scientists May Be Boon to Those Who Have Lost Hearing.

Vienna.—That it is possible for the human ear without the aid of the usual microphone to "hear" sound transmitted over an electric wire—in other words, for the ear itself to perform the function of a telephone receiver—was demonstrated to the Vienna Medical society.

The new apparatus, invented by Prof. Stephen Jellinek of Vienna university and Theodore Scheiber, Vienna municipal electrical engineer, turns sounds by means of a microphone into an electric current, but instead of turning them back into sound waves by another microphone it transmits them direct to the ear. The apparatus is complicated and dangerous because all sounds and the transmitting current must be highly amplified.

The discovery opens up the possibility of enabling totally deaf persons to hear conversation and music providing the hearing nerves are not disabled. Transmission of sound by an electric current seemed to prove the theory that the transmission of sensation by the nerves is a form of electric phenomena.

The eardrum, it is thought, ordinarily behaves like a microphone and the hearing nerves are like the electric wires connected with a microphone. The eardrum thus would turn the sound waves into an electric current which conveyed them over the nerves to the hearing center of the brain.

The new apparatus conveys an electric current, into which sounds have been converted by means of a transmitting microphone, directly to the nerves of hearing, which conveys them to the brain.

Mexican States Trap Rats by Wholesale

Mexico City.—Agents of the department of agriculture are waging determined warfare against a plague of rats, which recently have invaded wide areas in the states of Jalisco and Michoacan.

In response to appeals from the farmers of the affected districts, enormous traps have been constructed and, according to latest reports received at the agriculture department, the ranks of the rodent army are being reduced rapidly. The capture of 50,000 rats in a single night in a trap half a kilometer long was reported by one of the agents operating in Jalisco.

"Now, now, Cara! I will be heard." Ben was so dismayed that he stammered. "I-l-s-s-see here, Jos, she's entirely wrong. The child was my agent throughout. She's innocent. 'Tis I who'm to blame. Rot me, 'tis the truth! And—y-y-you know, you haven't any r-r-right to hate her. 'Tis I you hate. And what's the use of making party feeling more bitter than it is? Publish that list of signatures, arrest all the poor devils I tempted into the affair—and what will it bring you? A scandal that may wreck the country more surely than I planned to do it."

"He's right," cried Fellowes. "You must believe them, Mr. Inglepin."

There was bewilderment in Joshua's ruddy face.

"'Taking their side?' he queried. "Why, I thought you—don't you hate 'em, too?"

"I don't hate anyone," Fellowes answered slowly. "I'm through with hate."

"Ah, but you've satisfied your hate," protested Joshua. "Chater's dead. And Collishawe. And—"

"I have no regrets for Chater," Fellowes interrupted. "I'm not going to be a hypocrite about that. But killing him didn't make me any happier. And for Collishawe—I'd cheerfully give my own life, if that would bring him back. I did a brave, honorable man an injustice, and then procured his death—just as you will do, if you send your brother to the gallows. Or your niece. Or anyone whose name is on that paper."

"They're all traitors," fussed Joshua. "Don't deserve consideration. Of course, a woman's a different matter. But a traitor is a traitor, and all the talk in the world won't alter that."

Fellowes was struck by the stubborn tone of his employer, a faintly pugnacious attitude of self-defense.

"Are you honest with yourself, sir?" the Long Islander challenged him swiftly. "How much of your indignation springs from patriotism and how much from personal hatred?"

"Why—why—why—" Joshua was balked, palpably dismayed, but he floundered on: "The facts are evident. And if I do hate a man, is that a reason to excuse his treason?"

"No, but 'tis ample reason to examine your own feelings," rejoined Fellowes. "You have endeavored to ruin your brother—haven't you?"

"I have ruined him," scowled Joshua.

"Yes, you hold his life and reputation in your hand, there. Will it make you happier to use your power over him? Think, Mr. Inglepin! Are you happier, now? Have you felt more at rest in your mind since I gave you that paper?"

"Why not?" Joshua answered slowly. "I've hated him for years. A loose-thinking, aristocratical sort of fellow, always opposed to me."

"And you've always been opposed to him. Can't you be in opposition without killing him?"

"'Tisn't just that I want to see him swing," denied Joshua, ruddier than ever, the note of defense heavily stressed. "Damme, that's a vulgar idea, Fellowes."

"You are trying to satisfy your own hatred," snapped Fellowes. "And you can't do it. You know you can't do it. The closer you hug your hate, the spinier it grows. If you yield to it, you'll be miserable for the rest of your life. If you hold it off, you'll place your brother under an obligation—"

A glint of humor flashed in Joshua's china-blue eyes; his wide mouth quirked up at the corners.

"By G—d, you're right!" he exclaimed. "Why hang him when I can make him owe me what money can't buy, eh?"

Hoofs rattled in Front street.

"'Tis the governor," warned Fellowes.

"D—n the governor," Joshua blustered cavalierly. "Where's my flint-and-steel? And that candle? I can never find anything in this place."

Fellowes watched him with an amazement shared in full by Ben and Cara. Only the duenna remained uninterested, the beads clicking through her mittened fingers, while Joshua struck spark to tinder, and lit the candle [illegible] tracted from a cubbyhole of his [illegible]

"There," he announced triumphantly. "What d'ye think of this, Ben? Here's a debt you won't soon pay off, my lad!"

And he stabbed a corner of the petition into the candle flame, which blazed up magnificently. A thin trickle of smoke drifted across the room, and Fellowes heard Ben coughing, saw tears in Cara's eyes, but the smoke hadn't drifted in their direction.

Joshua chuckled to himself.

"Ah, you thought you could get on without me, but all you did was to make a fool of yourself. And I caught you, Ben, I caught you fairly!"

"Fairly, Jos," Ben agreed. "And I can't pay off the debt—except to say I'm sorry—for what happened before this."

"Sorry, eh? Ouch, damme! Burned my fingers. Well, the thing's done." He hesitated as the last charred flakes of the deadly petition floated to the floor. "Sorry eh? 'Matter of fact, so am I. Hanged if—ah, no, no!—d—d if I can remember what it was all about."

"Need you care, Uncle Jos?" asked Cara, between laughter and weeping.

"S'pose not, s'pose not, niece," Joshua admitted. "Still—"

"Oh, won't you two shake hands?" she begged. "Can't we be a family instead of enemies?"

Her father stepped forward promptly, and after a moment Joshua met him, arm outstretched.

"God bless you, Jos!"

"Eh? Eh? Seem to have something in my eye. Mind those fingers, Ben."

The door to the outer office was flung open, Nimrod Sopher standing at attention beside it.

"His excellency the governor," boomed the lawyer, and Governor Tompkins bustled into the room, bowing to Cara, plainly puzzled by the spectacle of the Inglepin brothers clasping hands.

"Your servant, ma'am," said his excellency. "Am I to witness a reconciliation, gentlemen? I heard the Centurion was in, and thought from your message—"

"Governor, I burned the d—n' paper!" Joshua confessed. "Hang the whole Federalist party—hang Ben—hang my niece, here? Couldn't go it. Ben's learned his lesson, so's the girl. The rest of 'em—Well, they'll eat out of any feed bag we hitch on 'em, soon as they hear we know their little scheme."

A smile warmed the governor's homely features.

"You did the right thing, Joshua," he pronounced. "Party hatred is as evil a thing as personal hatred, old friend. You've found that out, I see. Good! So let's all sit down, and talk it over reasonably and—But where's Captain Fellowes gone?"

Fellowes had done all he could do, he felt. His one desire was to avoid Cara Inglepin. If he didn't see her, perhaps he could forget her in time. At least, it would be better than trying not to look at her, struggling against the pricks of what-might-have-been, cursing himself for useless jealousy of a dead man.

CHAPTER XV

Mary McCarthy Intervenes

Fellowes had scarcely reached the waterfront when his name was called behind him in a brogue thicker than O'Shaughnessy's—"Misther Fellowes! Capt'in, sorr! Oh, Mother av God, will ye—" And he turned to face the waddling bulk of the duenna, her tallowy features crimson for once as she panted an incoherent stream of prayers, denunciations and saints' names:

"Ain't ye got the sinse ye was born wid? Oh, holy Bridgit, the wind's clane gone out av me! Shure, 'tis me end I'm at this minit!"

In one lightning-flash of memory Fellowes reviewed the moment of his leaving the True Bounty in the Badger's quarterboat. It hadn't been imagination, after all, that glimpse of the strange creature at the cabin window, and the fragment of brogue he had thought he heard. But what on earth could be the reason for her pretending ignorance of English?

Unchangeable Laws

Persia and Media were united under the same ruler after the conquest of the latter country by Cyrus of Persia in the Sixth century B. C., says an article in the Pathfinder Magazine. The laws of the Medes and Persians often are referred to as a type of the unalterable and irrevocable. This usage was suggested by several passages in the Bible. Daniel 6:8 says: "Now, O King, establish the decree, and sign the writing, that it be not changed, according to the law of the Medes and Persians, which altereth not." Again in the same chapter: "Then these men assembled unto the king, and said unto the king, Know, O king, that the law of the Medes and Persians is, that no decree nor statute which the king establisheth may be changed."

Acidity

The common cause of digestive difficulties is excess acid. Soda cannot alter this condition, and it burns the stomach. Something that will neutralize the acidity is the sensible thing to take. That is why physicians tell the public to use Phillips Milk of Magnesia.

One spoonful of this delightful preparation can neutralize many times its volume in acid. It acts instantly; relief is quick, and very apparent. All gas is dispelled; all sourness is soon gone; the whole system is sweetened. Do try this perfect anti-acid, and remember it is just as good for children, too, and pleasant for them to take.

Any drug store has the genuine, prescriptional product.

Miniature Farms

Government officials estimate that there are 5,000 farms of less than three acres in this country to which individuals gave their entire time last year. In taking the 1930 agricultural census, areas of less than three acres will not be listed as farms unless they produced as much as $250 worth of farm products in 1929. Small areas of more than three acres will be classed as farms regardless of the value of products if the land is actually being farmed.

IOWA PAIR HAVE FIVE SETS OF TWINS

Their Only Worry Is Finding Alliterative Names.

Council Bluffs, Iowa.—To most fathers the arrival of a pair of twins comes as a shock, but Andrew Koger has become inured and only smiled when informed his wife had given birth to their fifth pair.

Pride shone from his glance as he announced: "They told us before there were several families with four sets of twins. Now it's a cinch we've got them beat."

Married in 1905, Mr. and Mrs. Koger half expected twins when they learned their first baby was coming, for there were twins in both branches of the family.

They were disappointed the first time, however, when Orren, now twenty-four, appeared. High hopes faded three years later when Ellery was born and almost disappeared two years later, when Bessie made her appearance.

Then hope flared again and was rewarded with the appearance of Clyde and Claude in 1913. Abbie and Addie followed in 1915, and Floyd and Lloyd came in 1920.

Said Andrew to his wife, as she fed the latest arrivals:

"I told you so. There's twins and twins on both sides. There'll be more. You wait and see."

Two years passed before Jean and Jeannette showed up, and the parents named them and sought more alliterative names for use in case Andrew's prediction was fulfilled in greater portion.

Jack, now five, interrupted their search, and they began to believe the twins had ended, but last year hope was renewed.

Came 1930, and with it Norma Jean and Donald Dean.

Now Koger, who is forty-eight, ruminates as he works for the Union Pacific transfer in Council Bluffs, and his wife, forty-two, wonders as she works about the house, for more alliterative names may be needed.

"You never can tell; it may be the will of God; if more come, they will be taken care of and they will be welcome," Koger explained.

And little Jack, who, his father says, "by right should have been a twin," wonders and asks why people say "he's a single," as though that was something of which he should be ashamed.

American Students Will Tour Sweden

Stockholm, Sweden.—The first American student tour of Sweden, conducted by Prof. George M. Stephenson of the University of Minnesota, will take place this summer, according to plans made by a committee appointed here. Many prominent American educators have shown interest in the venture and the American advisory committee includes Prof. John A. Walz of Harvard university, Prof. Adolph S. Benson of Yale university and Prof. Robert Herndon Fife of Columbia university.

Limited to twenty-five undergraduates, the party will sail on June 27 on board the liner Gripsholm. The tour will combine sight-seeing with a series of lectures at the Stockholm university. Places of historic interest as well as the plants of some of Sweden's most important industries will be visited.

Under Knife 50th Time Due to His Experiments

Baltimore, Md.—Dr. Frederick H. Baetjer, internationally known Hopkins roentgenologist, is again at the hospital for an operation, at least his fiftieth, due to his dangerous work. Doctor Baetjer has lost in succession nearly all his fingers.

The rays have affected both his arms and caused the loss of one eye. He also has undergone several skin grafting operations. Doctor Baetjer's associates refer to him as the "last of the old guard." A pioneer in his field, most of his associates have paid with their lives for their investigations. Though often urged to retire, Doctor Baetjer refuses to give up his work.

West Still Has Cattle Rustlers to Bother It

Phoenix, Ariz.—The "wild and woolly West" of the cowboy movies is not decadent.

Arizona cattle rustlers stole 30,000 head of cattle, valued at $1,500,000, last year, according to an estimate by Hoyt Medler, secretary of the live stock sanitary board.

"There is more rustling going on in this state now than at any time in history," Medler declared, explaining that many Arizona bootleggers rustle cattle as a side line.

Kerosene Can Found Source of Long Years

Hastings, Minn.—Austin Knapp, ninety-six, Civil war veteran, believes not only wealth but also health comes from the soil, and the fountain of youth is in a kerosene can.

A spoonful of sand and a sip of kerosene are the daily health givers which Knapp credits with aiding in his longevity.

He says he intends to live another ninety-six years if he can.

CLOSE MOUNT VERNON ROOMS TO OCCUPANCY

Erect New Building to House Society Members.

Washington.—Never again will the bedroom where George Washington slept be occupied by an ordinary individual.

The Mount Vernon Ladies' association, a group of women from the 48 states who control and manage the Washington mansion, 18 miles south of the National Capital, have just finished an improvement at this historic place which means that the home of George Washington henceforth will be sacred from modern occupancy.

Since it was taken over by this group of women, restored and opened to the public, it has been occupied only three days of each year. That was when the Mount Vernon ladies came in May for their annual inspection visit. Then the mansion was closed to the public and at night the ladies slept in the historic Washington bedrooms. Now this will be a thing of the past.

New Building Nearly Ready.

Workmen are putting finishing touches on a handsome new building within the limits of Mount Vernon, which will be occupied by members of the Mount Vernon staff who live there, and has sufficient space so that when the ladies make their annual inspection visit they can sleep in the new building instead of in the mansion itself.

The new building is a low, rambling structure, copying the original architecture as closely as possible. It has strictly up to date modern features, however, including a three car garage and all necessary plumbing and bathroom equipment. It will fit into the landscape so that the average tourist visiting Mount Vernon will hardly be able to distinguish it from the original buildings.

Visitors Increasing.

The number of tourists visiting Mount Vernon is increasing in number from year to year, until now the historic estate nets an income from admission fees of more than $150,000 annually. No other historic spot in or near the Capital has an equal drawing power. Last year the total number of visitors was more than 600,000.

Twenty-five cents is the price of admission, and the mansion is open six days a week. A bill providing for its being taken over by the government is now pending in congress, and though this legislation will meet considerable opposition, there is a possibility of passage.

Operated by the government, the admission charge undoubtedly would be abolished. Only one government building in Washington has such a charge—the Lincoln museum, which is housed in the dwelling where Lincoln died.

The admission fee there is necessary because the house is not government owned.

Fabled "Lost Grass" Is Found on Western Farm

Bellingham, Wash.—The fabled "lost grass" of Europe, amazingly rediscovered recently on an Oregon dairy farm, is in such a heavy demand that the government experimental station wonders how the world managed to get along over a century without it.

The story of this strange grass is a romance of a far western stump farm. One year a peculiar pasture grass was found to die early in summer, when all growing conditions were in favor of green things. As soon as autumn rains fell the same pasture turned a dark green, as the dead grass suddenly returned in exultant resurrection.

Government experts were asked to study the field.

Examination of the plant revealed a bulbous root and bulb-like seed pod. The government agricultural experts could hardly believe their eyes. They all agreed that as nearly as could be determined it was the long lost, much written about grass which sleeps or hibernates while other varieties are green, then thrives best in the winter when food for live stock is low. It forms a perfect turf even under heavy snow or ice.

Experiments have been carried on in Australia, New Zealand, Alaska, Oregon, California and in Scotland, the original home of the pasturage.

Not only is the strange grass a perfect food for cattle, but the turf-making qualities make it valuable for winter lawns and parks and for golf course greens.

Various experimental stations of the Department of Agriculture are working to increase a supply of the "lost grass" for the increasing call from farmers and seedsmen.

Dog "Jailed" for Hunting Dead Master at Burials

FIVE-YEAR-OLD BOY KNOWS HIS BIBLE

Quotes Items From Scriptures With Facility.

Cincinnati.—If some person were to approach five-year-old Jacques D. Rietze and maternally lisp, "Ith 'e 'itty boy 'appy?" she'd probably receive some such amazing reply:

"Exceedingly, madam. Playing with a miniature locomotive affords me great pleasure."

If the minister should walk into the Rietze home and query of Jacques, "What was the greatest factor contributing to the defeat of the Ephraimites at the Jordan?" the boy likely would reply: "They didn't know their pronunciation."

Since he was four Jacques has been studying the Bible. He has learned more of its contents in that time, perhaps, then the average individual learns in a lifetime.

He knows and can furnish identities of Nebuchadnezzar, Belshazzar, not to mention the more public characters of Moses, Noah, and Abraham. He can deliver a sermon, quote scripture, and define "metaphysics," as well as "ecclesiastic."

His one handicap is speech. So zealous is he to impart his knowledge of religious subjects to listeners that the words fairly tumble out of his mouth. Consequently, he is rather difficult to understand in speech, as well as subject.

Like normal boys of his age, he delights with his toys, but even at play he mumbles Biblical quotations to himself. Once a passage is read him he never forgets and can repeat it verbatim.

His mother first acquainted him with the Bible. A few preliminary readings, however, and Jacques took the initiative to learn more. Mrs. Rietze cannot explain her son's unusual acumen and is fearful that he may become "not enough like other boys." However, when attempts are made to divert his mind to other subjects his day is spoiled, his mother declares.

A month ago Jacques was ill. Noticing the distress of his mother, he calmly assured her, "Don't worry, mother. Christ will cure me."

An Old Goat Pasture Now Colony of Wealth

Toronto.—In the suburban village of Forest Hill there is perhaps a greater concentration of wealth and power than in any other place of its size in Canada. Scarcely more than half a dozen years ago a large portion of the site of the "millionaire village" was a goat pasture. Small boys used to drive cows to and from wooded fields night and morning.

To make it easier for his sons to find the right pasture field among many wooded fields, which looked more or less alike, one farmer placed a sign bearing the words, "Forest Hill," on a small hilltop.

From that sign the village took its name when it was incorporated in December, 1923.

Earns More Than Hubby; So Wife Loses Alimony

Butte, Mont.—That large and increasing class of Americans, divorced husbands, won a material victory over the equally large class of divorced wives, in court the other day when District Judge Frank L. Riley ruled that an ex-wife is not entitled to alimony if her pay check is larger than her ex-husband's—this, assuming there are no children in the wife's custody.

Martin Jaten protested against paying his former wife, Violet, alimony because she earned more than he. The judge upheld the husband's contention.

Night Golfing on Tiny Links Is Latest Fad

Syracuse, N. Y.—Night golf, made possible through floodlighting miniature courses, is becoming a country hobby, according to A. H. Clarke, lighting expert, who has completed installation of lighting equipment for a score of such "midget" links in California, Florida and North Carolina.

Illumination is provided by 18 500-watt floodlights, equipped with diffusing lenses to eliminate the glare.

These under-sized links, started in resort centers, grew in popularity and the demand spread rapidly to other states.

Turn Natural Gas to Glass in New Process

Pittsburgh, Pa.—Conversion of natural gas into "Vinlyte," a glass product, was announced as a distinct forward step in the glass manufacturing industry today by Dr. W. A. Hamor, assistant director at Mellon institute. Although the new product, in its crystal transparency, closely resembles glass and possesses qualities lacking in ordinary glass, Vinlyte does not weather well.

Costs 85 Cents A Month To Lose Pounds of Ugly Fat

Thousands of Women Know This Is True

How would you like to lose 15 pounds of fat in a month and at the same time increase your energy and improve your health?

How would you like to lose unhealthy fat that you don't need and don't want, and at the same time feel better than you have for years?

How would you like to lose your double chin and your too prominent abdomen and at the same time make your skin so clean and clear that it will compel admiration?

How would you like to get your weight down to normal and at the same time develop that urge for activity that makes work a pleasure and also gain in ambition and keenness of mind?

Get on the scales today and see how much you weigh—then get an 85 cent bottle of Kruschen Salts which will last you for 4 weeks. Take one half teaspoonful every morning in a glass of hot water and when you have finished the first bottle weigh yourself again.

Now you can laugh at the people who pay hundreds of dollars to lose a few pounds of fat—now you will know the pleasant way to lose unsightly fat and you'll also know that the 6 vitalizing salts of Kruschen (Salts that your blood, nerves and glands must have to function properly)—have presented you with glorious health.

After that you'll want to walk around and say to your friends—"One 85 cent bottle of Kruschen Salts is worth one hundred dollars of any fat person's money."

Violet Rays Employed to Fight Common Colds

Experiments covering two years at Cornell university seem to indicate that the prevalence of the common cold may be reduced by 40 per cent by the use of the violet ray. The medical director of the institution said:

"In 1926 and 1927 there was not one of the normal students had colds, but among the cold-susceptible students there were weeks when as high as 62 per cent had colds. For two years we have irradiated cold-susceptible students through the dark, cold period of the year with ultra violet lenses over the entire skin surface from ten to fifteen minutes once a week.

"This ten to fifteen-minute irradiation of the entire surface of the body is equivalent to a whole week's sunlight in the summer with only the face, neck and hands exposed. On that basis we got a reduction in cold incidence of 40 per cent."

Make Plans to Salvage Tin From Ocean Depths

The tin mines of Cornwall, England, supposed to be pretty well worked out, are to be supplemented by dredging up the sands of the sea off the Cornwall coast.

Through the ages the fierce waves of the North Atlantic have been hammering at the rugged coasts of Cornwall and pulverizing the rocks to sand. On shore men have worked out the alluvial deposits and tin production has decreased by half. And now it is discovered that the sands under the sea are full of tin, sometimes as much as 10 per cent. So they have constructed a tunnel out under the waves at St. Ives and built a big concrete funnel into which the sand-suckers discharge the sand mixed with water to flow it down to the concentrating mill to separate the tin.

Pianos to Fit Horses

In order to transport pianos over mountain trails or difficult roads, an enterprising German manufacturer has constructed a special type of the instrument, which permits it to be carried on horseback. The piano has a U-shaped lower section which fits the animal. Other pianos are made dismountable so that they can be transported in several packing cases on the backs of mules, and assembled on delivery, because the instrument would be ruined were it to be hauled over many of the trails for hours, and often days, in a cart drawn by oxen.

Remarkable Memory

A caller on Elijah Harriman, South Warren, Maine, ninety-eight years old, found him doing his share of work and helping prepare the evening meal. His eyesight, hearing and memory are unimpaired. He said to the visitor: "I remember the first time I saw you; it was sixty years ago."

Biblical Pictures His Forte

Hofmann, who painted the famous "Christ in the Temple," was a German, born at Darmstadt in 1824. He died in 1902. His pictures owe their popularity to his illustrative talent and ideal conceptions of Biblical events.

First Auto Speeder?

Another record is shattered. A man named Auto Jim Quinn has long claimed the distinction of being the first man arrested in America for auto speeding. That was in 1905. Now comes along a statistician of the auto industry who says the honor should go to Thomas W. Shevlin of Minneapolis, who was dragged into court in that city in 1902 and paid $10 for driving his auto more than ten miles an hour.

Would you like to try this doctor's laxative free of charge?

Every family has occasional need of a laxative, but it should be a family laxative. One that can't form a habit, but can be taken as often as needed. When breath is bad or tongue coated. Or appetite fails. Only a doctor knows the right ingredients. Dr. Caldwell discovered the correct combination years ago. Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin combines harmless herbs and pure senna. It starts muscular action and soon corrects constipation. Gently, but surely, it relieves a bilious or sluggish condition. It is mild. Delicious. Effective. All druggists keep this famous prescription ready, in big bottles. Or write Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, Monticello, Ill., for a free trial bottle postpaid.

THE HOLT WEEKLY NEWS

Published Fridays at Holt, Marshall County, Minnesota.

Entered at the Holt postoffice as Second-Class Mail Matter.

H. O. Hanson, Publisher.

Subscription Price: $1.50; Canada and Foreign: $2.00.

With this issue, the News is commencing on its 20th year.

Last week we closed our 19th volume and feel that we have accamplished another feat by staying by the ship.

We wish to thank all our advertisers and subscribers for your loyal support and hope to have the pleasure of serving you another year.

This week we have noticed that a lot of the people here have commenced to clean up their premises and make the town a little more lively.

We also notice that some have not paid any attention to the clean-up notice the Village Council has published. Don't forget this, that, if you have not cleaned up your places by May 10th, some one will be hired to do it and you will have to pay for the work and other costs.

A clean town looks more inviting than one where rubbish and junk lays piled up on the vacant lots. We have a few lots here that need a little looking after in that respect.

Let us unite our efforts in making Holt a bright and clean place in which to live.

Paying The Fiddler

If you have ever longed to see a real live school play, then, be sure to come and see the play "Paying The Fiddler" which will be presented by the Holt High School on Friday and Saturday evenings, May 2 and 3.

The teachers and students have spent a lot of time and effort in preparing this play for presentation to the people of this community and, we hope that they will show their appreciation by attending the doings on one of the evenings.

Wool Growers Met

R. J. Lund, manager of the National Cooperative Wool Marketing Corporation, with its concentration point at Thief River Falls, and R. J. Douglas, county agent of Pennington county, were here on Monday evening and held a wool growers meeting A number of farmers, who raise sheep and market several hundred pounds of wool each year, attended the meeting. Mr. Douglas explained the way the wool will be bought and sold thru the marketing corporation, and outlined the methods of handling the large volume of wool and how it will be graded.

The corporation will have a concentration point at Thief River Falls, having rented the big Oen Merc. company's warehouse and the Riley potato warehouse for storage purposes. There will be a full time wool grader at these places during the wool marketing period the next few weeks.

Mr. Lund stated that the farmers can get an advance of 90 per cent of the present market price at the time they sell their wool. They will get the other 10 percent when the wool is sold in the pool.

The complete marketing cost will be 5½ per cent which only leaves 4½ per cent that the farmer has to wait for.

Draper & Co of Boston, one of the biggest wool buyers in this country has been appointed by the Federal Farm Board to handle the wool for the National Co-op Marketing Corporation. Every farmer should stand by the cooperative plan.

Greed Is Back Of It

How much of the outcry against prohibition originates with the men who would make money out of liquor traffic if it were restored to government favor? On Jan 25, the New York World said:

Representatives of brewers and distillers told a World correspondent today that their principals would be willing to pay One Billion One Hundred and Twenty-five Million Dollars annualy in Federal taxes to return to pre-prohibition production

If the brewers and distillers could afford to pay over a billion dollars ayear for the privilege of attacking the pay envelope, it would be hard to estimate their prospective profits.

It appears that the Association Against the Prohibition Amendment circulated a letter to prominent Republicans signed by Mr. Lamont DuPoint and practically the same letter to prominent Democrats signed by Mr. John Raskob.

We Thank You

Very much, for your cooperation in the production of a quality product which has come to lead the world in its line. Only thru the unceasing efforts of the farmer and the buttermaker, has it been possible to attain the standard we now have.

You have thru your good care of your cream and cows, given us a raw material of extra fine quality, from which we have been able to manufacture a butter that commands the top price, and, that brings you better returns than a great many larger concerns making inferior grades.

We are here to help you continue producing as good or even better quality cream in the future. If at any time you have problems to solve come in and talk them over.

School Notes

High School

New Editors were appointed to collect school notes. They are as follows:

First and Second grades—Helen Monson; Third and Fourth grades—Madeline Hanson; Fifth and Sixth grades—Ruth Saastad; Seventh and Eighth grades—Oscar Nohre; High School—Eleanor Larson. Editor-in-Chief—Esther Hagberg.

Mr. Westby of Middle River made a business visit at school Tuesday.

The play was very successful and we appreciate the support given us by the people of the community. The auxiliary fund was considerably increased and it will be used in the very near future for additional new equipment.

Miss Torblaa was absent from school on Friday afternoon on account of illness.

Joe Nelson has accepted the position as mail carrier for the Post Office Department. This in connection with the job as Custodian of our school keeps him busy.

Little Oscar was traveling in a Pullman car for the first time. He awoke during the night. "Do you know where you are," asked his mother.

"Sure I do," answered the young traveler. "I am in the top drawer."

Seventh and Eighth Grades

Margaret Olson has again been prevented from continuing her studies in the 8th grade. This time because of mumps.

The boys are now interested in baseball since we secured a new bat and ball. The girls are playing kittenball and will start playing criss-cross goal and volley ball.

Clarence Doran, a former student of this school, was a visitor in the grade Tuesday.

Fifth and Sixth Grades

The fifth and sixth graders have been buss making hoop sticks and kites. They are going out to fly them as soon as they are completed.

"Mother's Day" Mottos are being collected now by the 5th and 6th grades.

Three of our pupils in the fifth and sixth grade room have been absent lately because of the mumps.

We hope they will return to their work soon.

Third and Fourth Grades

These poems were submitted by the 3rd and 4th grades.

April Showers

April showers are what I like,
Because it rains and rains at night
It rains all day,
It rains all night,
April showers are what I like.

Beatrice Larson. 4th grade

A Rainy Day

The rain is falling,
Falling fast,
It falls on fields and houses fast,
Oh! how I like to see the rain,
Falling down my window pane,
Don't you?

Robert Sandberg, 3rd grade.

Circus Parade

The circus parade is coming today,
And everybody is so gay,
The lion came in such a rage,
And jumped into his big cage.

Glenn Carlson, 4th grade.

First and Second Grades

Spring is approaching and the pupils in the 1st and 2nd grades are arranging their sand table for this season. A very artistic health house has been made and each pupil has brought a plant for the garden.

These plants will be taken care of in school and at the end of the school term, they will be put in the garden.

Tourist Cars Come

Tourist cars with tags representing every state from Maine to California, are again becoming numerous on the highways. With paved roads extending from border to border of the states east and south of Minnesota, foreign cars are not only the regular thing the year around, but the summer tourist caravan starts much earlier than in former years.

Among the cars with tags from other states, according to a Highway bulletin, is the usual sprinkling of Minnesota residents who have spent the winter in states like California. where they pay a nominal auto tax but escape the personal property which residents of these states must pay. Some of these get Minnesota tags soon after they get home, but some try to drive through the summer on the foreign tags until they leave for the South when winter comes again.

Minnesota's habit of showing every possible ciurtsey to visitors makes enforsement of the law against auto tax evaders difficult. The Minnesota resident with a foreign licence looks just like a bona fide tourist on the highway, and until there is definite informattion showing that he is trying to evade the tax, he is given the benifit of the doubt.

Many Took In The Play

The High School play "Paying The Fiddler" presented at the school auditorium on Friday and Saturday night was a decided success. People from other towns came and the local folks showed their appreciation by attending in a large number. Much credit is due the teachers and students who spent their time and efforts in making the play a success and for the splendid way it was presented.

Several school children have been confined to their homes the past week due to mumps.

Advertise it in this paper.

Murder Mystery Is Near Solution

Man Is Arrested for Killing Bachelor in North Carolina 38 Years Ago.

High Point, N. C.—Information furnished by J. Allan Austin, attorney, who as a young law student vowed to bring to justice the murderers of his uncle, led to the arrest in Florida recently of John Morgan, thus lifting the veil in a thirty-eight-year-old murder mystery in Stanly county. One other man is expected to be arrested upon information given the Florida authorities by the High Point man.

The identity of the murderers of Francis Talley, bachelor, has been an unsolved mystery. It was rumored that he was killed for his money, being reputed to possess a hoard of gold coins. Several men were tried and acquitted immediately after the murder, and then the case was shelved, remaining ever since in the category of unsolved cases.

Aided Slayers to Escape.

A few days ago Mr. Austin, visiting his old home place, came into contact with an old friend who related to him a story that sounded more like fiction than truth. He said that a man told him how he had guided the two alleged killers of Talley out of the state, and that he had not revealed the secret during trials that followed the murder because he had been warned that to do so would be to imperil his own life.

According to the story the two killers became drunk after they had killed Talley and chopped his furniture into bits. Then they encountered the man, then a youth, and forced him to ride bareback with them to the South Carolina line and bring back their horses. There were then no automobiles in this section of the country.

With this information in his possession, Mr. Austin inaugurated an investigation, with the result that he learned that one of the men, alleged to be Morgan, was living in Florida under an assumed name.

The story of the murder, as told by Mr. Austin, is as amazing and absorbing as a detective yarn. Talley, an aged bachelor, lived alone in his little country home. He was a gold miner and one of the richest men in the county. North Carolina was a high producer of gold in those days, and mining was an industry. A living might be obtained by panning along many North Carolina streams. Stanly county was one of the producing communities.

Horribly Mutilated.

On the night of November 21, 1892, two men came down the side of the mountain and slew him. His head was nearly severed from his body, and his face was split down the middle, apparently with a sharp ax. The cabin had been ransacked. The murderers, evidently chagrined at their inability to locate the hidden treasure, chopped the furniture in the building into small bits perhaps with the same ax with which they had slain their victim. Bloody footprints were visible throughout the house.

Young Austin, his imagination impressed with the horrible crime, determined three decades ago to find the men who killed his uncle. When the two Florida suspects are tried in Stanly county Superior court the lawyer, nephew of the dead man, will appear at the bar to avenge the memory of his relative.

Stanly county officers are working with vigor and determination to bring about further arrests.

Rat Bites Fireman as He Fights Blaze

Boston.—Fire Captain Arthur E. Swift was taken to City hospital recently after being hitten by a rat that ran up his trousers leg during a fire in a Boylston street lunchroom.

The fireman killed the rat, but only after it had inflicted a painful wound.

Eskimo Spitz Decides Own Case in Court

Cambridge, Mass.—An Eskimo spitz, beribboned and perfumed for the occasion, appeared in District court here and decided its own case.

Joseph J. Clark contended that the spitz was his dog Teddy, Mrs. Annie L. Ward claimed it was her dog Prince.

Judge John M. Maloney ordered three members of the Clark family and three members of the Ward family to line up on opposite sides of the courtroom. Then the fluffy white object of the litigation was turned loose.

The Clarks chorused "come Teddy" and the Wards coaxed with cries of "come Prince."

The dog went first to the Clarks, then to the Wards, then back to the Clarks.

Members of the Ward family became hysterical when the judge ordered them to surrender the spitz to Clark and refused to do so until court had threatened to impose heavy fines on them. They said they would carry the case into the civil courts.

He Flies Distance of 675,000 Miles

Paris.—The French aviator, Charles Corsin, commercial pilot for the Air Union, has rounded out the equivalent of his twenty-eighth trip around the world.

He has had the unusual record of flying 6,612 hours, a total distance of 675,000 miles, and has carried 10,500 passengers, all without the slightest accident. His record is believed unique in the history of aviation.

Electricity Makes Plants Grow

Germany gets surprising results from "wired" gardens and hothouses. The system is copied from the Swedish and Norwegian experiments in forcing plant growth by electricity. The picture shows an electrically heated garden at one of the experiment stations.

GERMANS PLAN TO DRAIN NORTH SEA FOR NEW LAND

Gigantic Scheme Is Being Evolved by Engineers, Says Unconfirmed Report.

London.—A gigantic scheme to drain a large part of the North sea, formerly sometimes called the German ocean, is being evolved by German engineers, according to unconfirmed reports received here.

If the plan becomes a reality eastern England would lose miles of its seacoast. But with a great part of the North sea drained, a vast new land would come into being with rich mineral wealth to keep a population of over 20,000,000.

The German experts, according to the reports, are considering building two giant dams. One would stretch from Hunstanton, Norfolk, near Sandringham, the king's country residence, to the upper coast of Denmark, and the other around Kent, across the English channel and along the Belgian and Dutch coasts to the neighborhood of Scheveningen, the Dutch seaside resort next to The Hague.

Dover and Calais would be connected by giant bridges, thus making a channel tunnel unnecessary. Norfolk and Essex would lose their seaboards. Between the dams would be a new land—more than 100,000 square miles in area—possessing amazing mineral wealth and possibly rich oil fields.

British experts almost unanimously view the scheme as impracticable. One described it as "a wildcat scheme." Tidal conditions appear to be the chief obstacle.

Wood, Aid of Farragut, Is 91, and Going Strong

Haverstraw, N. Y.—Horatio Nelson Wood, for fifty-nine years a banker here and before that an officer aboard Admiral Farragut's flagship Hartford, recently observed his ninety-first birthday at his home here. Mr. Wood is president of the Haverstraw National Bank and Trust company, and goes to his office every day.

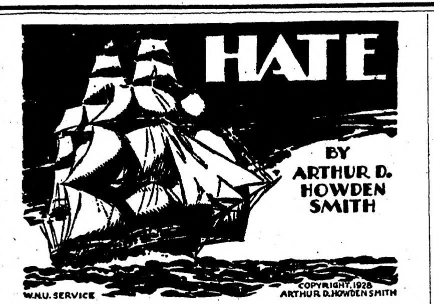
Mr. Wood's parents, English immigrants, selected his middle name in honor of Lord Nelson, British sea fighter. When the Civil war came, Horatio Wood enlisted in the Union navy, and served with Farragut at the battles of New Orleans and Mobile Bay.

Former Wife Objects to Epitaph, and Sues

London.—Jenny Crawshay Ralston is suing her husband, William, for $125,000 because, after a separation order granted 14 years ago, he erected a monument to her with this inscription:

"In loving memory of Jenny, the dearly beloved wife of W. R. Crawshay Ralston, died May 20, 1916."

The wife claims that she is not dead, and that, as she is in business for herself, such a memorial has done her considerable financial damage.



HATE

BY ARTHUR D. HOWDEN SMITH

—35—

"By your leave, ma'am!" he rasped sharply. "You've deceived me many months. How d'you excuse it?"

Her face fell, and the glibness left her speech.

"Ah, now, yer honor! Don't be afther wringin' yerself into a murtherin' rage—and me no more nor fearful for a full stomach—and sorra the chance av that more often nor not, what wid the worry was on me and the fret av the say."

"That's no answer," he told her, with what he knew was mock-severity.

"Ah, but them Sisthers, sorr!" she sighed. "For ever afther me becaze I tuk a bite and a sup bechune meals, and cryin' out loud if I had more nor a hunk o' salt fish to me dinner."

To save himself, Fellowes couldn't resist a smile.

"You mean you were in a convent?" he asked. "Were you expelled?"

"I'll thank ye not to asperse me repytashun," she retorted angrily. "Expelled! Divil a bit! All the ould tartar would be sayin' was: 'Mary darlin', don't ye think ye'd do better in privut service? 'Tis me loves ye like me own flesh-and-blood, but 'twas never a convent ye was born for.' And when the worrd come me young leddy was for settin' up a duenna, in the Portuguese style, she says to me, Mother Seraphina, she says: 'And here's God's own blessed chance for ye, Mary darlin', but 'tis Portuguese ye must be, and see ye, never let on there's a dhrop av Irish blood into ye or a worrd av English on yer tongue.'"

"I still don't understand," said Fellowes, shaking his head. "You were a nun, anyway?"

"Sorra a nun. Unless ye call me nun that was housekeeper for the Irish Nuns at Lisbon, and that same by token Mother Seraphina that was born Margaret Gilhooley, third daughter to ould Squire Gilhooley av the Reeks, in County Donegal, would have me come wid her when she tuk the veil for a bit av company and blanhanderin by times she wasn't prayin'. But that was before I got me growth or me appeytite, and shure, says she, I'd ate the convent out av its funds if I went on. But was I to blame that the dear God give me a stomach above nuns' fare?"

"So you left the convent for Miss Inglepin's service?"

"That I did, and maany's the time I've been down on me two shinbones, thankin' the blessed saints that sint a foine, lovely, young leddy the like av her—"

"But didn't she know you were Irish?" Fellowes interrupted, his suspicions reawakened.

The duenna eyed him shrewdly.

"Not she! 'Twas a Portuguese she wanted. One that knew the way av the counthry, and Mother Seraphina says, says she, me young leddy wouldn't be satisfied wid—"

"Was that honest?"

"And why not?" snapped the attendant. "How was a chit of a girrul to know what was betther for her? And I'll thank ye not to miscall me, that's been a good friend to ye, for all yer black scowls, and murtherin' rages, and the blood ye've spilt on the right hand and the left."

"I'm sorry," Fellowes apologized, genuinely bewildered. "But you mustn't blame me—"

"Arrah, and 'tis nobody else I'll blame, and me young leddy asettin' wid the salt tears on her cheeks, all for the way ye mishandled her, wan minite for kissin' and the next for hangin'! Think shame to yerself, sorr, that have spread misery wid yer hate, and won't see love when it comes in yer path, but turrn yer back on it, and go off to seek God knows phwat!"

She paused to catch her breath, perhaps to give him an opportunity to answer; but he was speechless, fumbling for comprehension of her words.

"Ah, as shure as me name's Mary McCarthy, that was housekaper to the Irish Nuns, and for hunger sint out to wait on the swatest young leddy alive, 'tis ye are the fool av the worrld!" The beady, black eyes assumed a sympathy at odds with the spirit of the declaration. "God forgive ye, sorr," she went on softly, "do ye have to be told 'tis just yerself she loves?"

"I'm afraid you don't know what you're talking about," Fellowes protested unsteadily. "Miss Inglepin was very fond of Captain Collishawe. He deserved her affection. That's why I feel so bad over his death."

"Oh, my glory," exclaimed Mary McCarthy. "'Tis a babe in arrms ye are! Ain't ye got the sinse to know she turned down poor Capt'in Collishawe for yerself? That was why she made such a todo over him—and to her credit. A kind, gentle lamb wouldn't do a hurrt to anny maan, which is more nor the best av them deserve!"

With a strength none would have suspected, she clutched one of Fellowes' elbows, and started to propel him back to Front street; but almost immediately she released him.

"Shure ye can run faster nor me that's weighted wid belly-fat," she said. "Go on, lad! Put the spurs to yer flanks, and make haste to her. There's nothin' the like av tears to wipe clane the sorriest slate. So be aisy—and on yer way."

He obeyed mechanically. The crowd in front of the Inglepin warehouse had increased in size with the arrival of the governor, and made room for him reluctantly until Doak and Eaches recognized him, and abandoned their reminiscing to brandish musket-butts and bayonets and shout importantly:

"Stand aside, good people! Stand aside for Squire Fellowes!"

Cara, mournful and perturbed, sat at her uncle's desk, Joshua on one side of her, Ben on the other. The governor was stamping back and forth in front of the window, while Sopher orated with keen appreciation of the distinction of his audience.

"—and I can but asseverate once again, your excellency, that as the woman passed me I distinctly heard her say—or possibly 'twould be preferable to employ the word mutter—'Ah, 'tis hungry ye'll be this hour tomorrer, Mary McCarthy!'"

"She'll not be, then," asserted Fellowes.

The four men stared at him in a complex of humors, but Cara cried out spiritedly:

"That she shan't be, and I care not who'd persecute her. Besides, 'tis ridiculous, Mr. Sopher. The poor creature has no English."

"Yet we all heard her speak," Governor Tompkins pointed out temperately.

"She speaks English as well as any of us, your excellency," Fellowes interjected; "but there's no great mystery to it. She was in need of employment; she was told Miss Inglepin would accept only a Portuguese; and lest she should lose her place she pretended ignorance of English. She abandoned her ruse because—because she had her mistress' happiness at heart."

He looked straight at Cara, and after a moment of indecision she let her eyes meet his.

"I owe a debt to Mary McCarthy," Fellowes added gently. "She showed me what I was too blind to see."

The answering light that shone in Cara's face drew him forward a step before he could check himself.

"Humph," grunted the governor. "I must get back to Government house. You might come with me, Joshua."

"Mind if I come, too?" asked Ben.

"Glad to have you," answered Joshua, linking arms with him.

In the doorway his excellency paused, and seized hold of Sopher's shoulder.

"You, too," he commanded.

"But, your excellency, I am on duty! In charge of Captain Fellowes' escort, and—"

"You come along as Fellowes' attorney," advised the governor. "He'll not require assistance here or I miss my guess."

Cats Provided Music

One of the strangest musical (?) instruments ever heard of is described in a book written by Willenski. He states that when Emperor Charles V introduced Philip II to the subjugated Netherlanders in 1549 there was a procession through Brussels, in which figured a musician with an organ. A cat with its tail tied to a key was imprisoned in each pipe, and as the musician struck the notes the tails were pinched and the cats screeched and howled. It seems hardly credible to this age of sensibility. There was no S. P. C. A. in those days.

"As Ever, Yours"

Ruskin—who got into trouble with Whistler over a critique—was wont to attack all and sundry with a savage merriment which even his best friends at times resented. Once he wrote to a friend hoping that a fierce criticism written by him of his friend's picture would make no difference to their friendship. To which the friend had the wit to reply:

"Dear Ruskin: Next time I meet you I shall knock you down, but I hope it will make no difference to our friendship."—Kansas City Star.

Use American Expressions

United States navy sailors visiting Africa have observed an odd expression used by the natives. When speaking of the Nile river which flows to the north they refer to it as going "down north" or "up south."

RICH RELATIVES SEEK LOST GIRL

Orphan Has Been Missing for 18 Years.

Seattle.—There's a fairy godmother in Seattle waiting to lavish her love and the good things of this life on Hope Johnston, an orphan, if the right Hope Johnston can be found.

The lucky girl, who should now be about twenty, may learn all about her good fortune by communicating with Louis Abels, insurance broker in the Exeter apartments.

For the "fairy godmother" is none other than Abels' wife, Margaret. For years Mrs. Abels has been searching for Hope, whose father, Mrs. Abels' brother, was killed in a mine explosion at Tolt in 1911, and whose mother died of a broken heart shortly after.

Mrs. Abels' long search for her niece was brought to light when Abels visited Justice J. B. Wright for information regarding the Hope Johnston who had been given a suspended sentence of thirty days in his court for purloining a girl friend's party dress.

Thinking the girl might be the one he and his wife had vainly searched for through the years. Abels obtained detailed information about her, which led only to another disappointment, he admitted.

"I am certain she is not the same Hope Johnston," he said, "even though the police have not been able to find her again so that we could see her. The information we have now convinces me we were on the wrong track."

Despite the fact that the girl in question had violated the law, Abels said he and his wife stood ready to give her a good home, had she proved to be "the" Hope Johnston, and "if she were not beyond redemption."

Santa Claus Role Does Not Fit Large Feline

Ventura, Calif.—Next time Tiger, the big cat belonging to F. Johnson at the Ventura substation of the Southern California Edison company, finds himself on a roof top, he will not try to play Santa Claus and slide down the chimney.

Tiger did that while prowling around his owner's housetop and, as a result, spent several uncomfortable hours at the bottom of a chimney, with no more chance of getting out than the proverbial frog in the well.

His plaintive "meows" for help drew Johnson's notice. Unable to get his pet out, he called the fire department.

The rescue was performed by Capt. Leslie Ley, who picked a hole in the base of the brick chimney and allowed Tiger, dirty and ashamed, but unhurt, to slink out to a breakfast of cream and liver.

Sam, Overcome in Bath, Saved by Census Taker

New York.—The flame under the water heater in Sam Bianco's room went out while Sam was taking a bath. The room rapidly filled with gas and in a short time Sam lost his senses.

He was awakened when somebody shook him vigorously.

"What's your name?" asked the man who had saved Sam's life.

"Sam Bianco," was the reply.

"Have you a radio?" the rescuer demanded.

The man who had walked into Sam's room just in time to turn off the gas and open the windows was Morton Kotzen, census enumerator.

Cook Given $22,000 for Lost Sense of Taste

New York.—A Supreme court jury valued a cook's senses of taste and smell at $22,500 in awarding a verdict in that amount to Pauline Goodman, forty-three, against E. Gates Barnard. While Miss Goodman was driving with her sister and her sister's child in October, 1927, a car owned by Mr. Barnard ran into the Goodman car. Several specialists testified that as a result of the accident the cook, whose skull was fractured, had lost her taste and smell.

Plenty of Generals

Prague.—According to the newspaper "Vecerni List," Czechoslovakia, a country with less than 14,000,000 inhabitants, has twice as many generals in her army as did the Hapsburg monarchy, which until the end of the World war had a population of approximately 45,000,000, there being one general in Czechoslovakia for each 400 soldiers. There is one commissioned officer for each five soldiers.

Earthquake Irrigates Field in California

Brawley, Calif.—An earthquake irrigated a cantaloupe field here recently when a tremblor caused small geysers to spout five inches high over the 160 acre field owned by the S. A. Gerrard company.

The water irrigated the entire field and then flooded adjacent areas before subsiding. Small sand piles were left in the wake of the unusual inundation and a beet field nearby was completely covered by new sand.

DANCING KEEPS OFF OLD AGE, DAME SAYS

Octogenarian Teaches Others Youthful Steps.

Mill Valley, Calif.—For more than three-quarters of a century Mme. Harriet Foreman Emrick has danced—danced the years away, danced old age away.

For more than half a century she has been teaching others to dance—to dance and stay young.

Today, at eighty, Mme. Emrick is still dancing every day, teaching others to dance, including her two great-grandchildren. She is still youthful, graceful as a wisp of rising smoke—and happy!

Still Ambitious.

For the soldiers of America in three wars, the Civil, Spanish and World wars, Mme. Emrick has danced gratis. It is her one ambition now to dance once again, for the last time in public, before what remains of the Civil war veterans, for the Spanish-American veterans and for the American Legion, all together.

She is a sweet and gracious old lady, this octogenarian, who still teaches the dance to young and old in her Mill Valley studio. She has classes every day and is assisted by her daughter, who was known to the stage as "Clarissa, the Dancer," and by her granddaughter, known as "Georgine." Her two great-grandchildren, Harvey and Helen Jean, are her regular pupils.

And lest it be thought that Mme. Emrick teaches only the graceful, stately movements of bygone generations, let it be emphasized that she can tap dance with the best of them and toddle a wicked jazz number with any of the sheiks or shebas.

Born in 1850.

"The dance is a part of the religion of the body," declares Mme. Emrick. "I call myself the priestess of that religion which I originated."

Mme. Emrick has trained scores who have made a mark upon the stage and ballet. She was born in Fort Madison, Iowa, in 1850. She first began to teach the dance more than fifty years ago in Portland, Ore.

Boyhood Friends Meet Again as Bank Chiefs

Hardin, Mont.—A boyhood friendship which spanned a half century of silence and separation was renewed here recently when two bank presidents clasped hands and exchanged reminiscences.

As a boy Charles Helmer, now president of the First National bank of Twin Falls, Idaho, lived at the Wisconsin home of W. E. Warren, now president of the Big Horn bank of Hardin. The youths became fast friends, but when necessity of making a living brought separation they soon lost track of each other.

When Helmer called Warren by long distance telephone on business the latter immediately recognized the mature voice on the wire as that of his boyhood pal, and the reunion followed.

Employ Flame Guns to Kill Locusts by Tons

Cairo.—The Egyptian government is meeting this year's locust menace by making war on these enemies of the country. Already nearly 800 tons of locusts have been killed by flame guns in the Sinai peninsula.

So far the attempts of the swarms to reach the fertile Nile valley have been fruitless. A big battle was fought at Kantara, where the slaughter amounted to eleven tons and another big swarm was overwhelmed, like Pharaoh's host, in the Red sea, ner Suez.

The danger now is that swarms have been breeding in the Sinai peninsula, and the young are likely to be hatched shortly.

U. S. Women Swindled of $700,000,000 in 1929

Chicago.—Activities of women financiers were outlined today at the Executive club by Howard E. Reed, a Pittsburgh financier. He stated:

"Eighty-five per cent of all salaries in the country are spent by women. Last year feminine financiers invested $700,000,000 in fraudulent securities. It is the fault of their husbands, brothers, sons and fathers, who do not take time to teach them sound finances.

"They further purchased on the installment plan depreciated luxuries of little value to them and cut down their savings by $150,000,000."

Volcano-Made Charcoal Warms Alaska People

Kodiak, Alaska.—Charcoal forests left in the wake of the ash storm from the eruption of Mt. Katmai in 1912 yielded an excellent fuel for island residents this winter.

Whole forests were buried in red hot sand and ashes and the wood turned into charcoal. Trees one foot in diameter are completely charred through. Uncovered and broken into small pieces, it is found to be acceptable fuel.

Turtle Has 2 Heads

New Athens, Ill.—Louis Wiget, of this city, is the possessor of a two-headed turtle, which he has preserved in alcohol. The turtle was caught at a clubhouse near here some time ago. It is about the size of a 50-cent piece and is perfectly formed except for the double head.

LIGHTS of NEW YORK

By GRANT DIXON

Live Exhibit.

The American Museum of Natural History, a vast and impressive hall of dead things, has one live exhibit—snakes. Everything else is as extinct as the dinosaur exhibit. A few live snakes are no great trouble to a well organized museum, but the Natural History museum has been greatly upset. A garter snake decided to have a family, and brought 24 troublesome children into being. The infants were something like moths; they got into everything. They seeped out of their own enclosures, and some of the best minds of the museum have been sorely taxed in hunting the babies down. They aren't sure that all have been captured yet. Nobody is greatly worried, though, for garter snakes are quite harmless.

* * *

Roof Scene.

As I sit in my office, I can see, on the rooftop across the street, a man practicing a speech. He is ineffectually trying to hide himself behind a chimney. He is holding a copy of the speech in one hand, and wildly gesticulating with the other. Others in my building have noticed him, and one of the onlookers yells applause. "Yea-a-a!" The speaker turns, and grins. "I've got to make it tomorrow night," he yells. "Want to hear me?"

Bob's Dream.

Robert Benchly relates that he had a dream the other night.

"I dreamed," he told me, "that I was acting as a judge in a dispute between two Indians over a blanket. The affair had just got to the point where one Indian called the other a thief, when I woke up. I looked at the clock. It was early—only 8 o'clock. So I decided I had time to go back to sleep and hear the rest of the case."

* * *

New Vogue

It is not surprising these days to notice among the snooty limousines that race up and down Park avenue a ridiculous old gasoline buggy of the vintage of 1905 or 1910. The occupant thereof will not be a junkman, as one might suspect, but one of the upper set. The rich, and particularly the nouveau riche, have adopted the fad of buying and operating museum-piece motor cars.

* * *

Slight Error.

A young New York college professor recently received a mass of flowers and telegrams that he didn't appreciate, all due to the carelessness of a rewrite man on a financial newspaper. This rewrite man is employed in boiling down the news of the day as it comes over the tickers. One item read that Soandso, assistant dean at a certain college, had been made dean. The rewrite man thought the information to be that Soandso is dead—and he wrote it thus.

Dumb?

And there's the story of the beautiful girl who became secretary to the president of a large investment counsel firm in Wall street, and worked at her new job for two months before she discovered she was working for a financial institution, and not a firm of lawyers.

Idea of Fun.

Joseph Horowitz, an interpreter for the Magistrate's court, recently inherited $1,000,000 from his brother, the late Conrad Huber, flashlight manufacturer. With all that money in his pocket, he has modestly asked for a month's vacation, so that he may accompany a German opera company on a tour of the Mid-West and Far West. He says he likes German opera. After the tour he will return to work.

Royal Elephant Runs Away to Go Swimming

Delhi.—An elephant from the royal stable took French leave to go swimming in the river. Six elephants and two camels were sent after him. The two camels, holding the elephant's ears in their jaws, and the six truant officers whipping him with their trunks from behind, returned the wayward animal home. He has gone on a hunger strike and refused food for 10 days.

When BABIES are upset

Baby ills and ailments seem twice as serious at night. A sudden cry may mean colic. Or a sudden attack of diarrhea—a condition it is always important to check quickly. How would you meet this emergency—tonight? Have you a bottle of Castoria ready? There is nothing that can take the place of this harmless but effective remedy for children; nothing that acts quite the same, or has quite the same comforting effect on them.

For the protection of your wee one—for your own peace of mind—keep this old, reliable preparation always on hand. But don't keep it just for emergencies; let it be an everyday aid. Its gentle influence will ease and soothe the infant who cannot sleep. Its mild regulation will help an older child whose tongue is coated because of sluggish bowels. All druggists have Castoria; the genuine bears Chas. H. Fletcher's signature on the wrapper.

Sea Makes Relentless War on Eastern Coast

About 10,000 persons annually visit Highland light on the tip end of Cape Cod. According to Keeper Fred Tibbetts, who has had charge of the station for seventeen years, receiving visitors and answering questions are more wearing than the duties Uncle Sam imposes. It was in 1797 that the United States government bought this reservation and began construction of the first Highland light.

The constant battering of the seas against the cliffs at Truro, and erosion of the sand dunes by wind and weather, have taken surprising toll. The original deed showed the conveyance of ten acres of land. Today there remain less than four acres. At the brink of the cliff are wooden benches and seats for visitors. Every other year it becomes necessary to move these back several feet.

It seems but a question of time before the famous lighthouse and its cluster of official buildings must either be moved or go tumbling into the sea.—New York Times.

She Lost 19 Pounds of Fat in 27 Days

During October a woman in Montana wrote—"My first bottle of Kruschen Salts lasted almost 4 weeks and during that time I lost 19 pounds of fat—Kruschen is all you claim for it—I feel better than I have for years."

Here's the recipe that banishes fat and brings into blossom all the natural attractiveness that every woman possesses.

Every morning take one half teaspoonful of Kruschen Salts in a glass of hot water before breakfast.

Be sure and do this every morning for "It's the little daily dose that takes off the fat."—Don't miss a morning. The Kruschen habit means that every particle of poisonous waste matter and harmful acids and gases are expelled from the system.

At the same time the stomach, liver, kidneys and bowels are toned up and the pure, fresh blood containing Nature's six life-giving salts is carried to every organ, gland, nerve and fibre of the body and this is followed by "that Kruschen feeling" of energetic health and activity that is reflected in bright eyes, clear skin, cheerful vivacity and charming figure.

If you want to lose fat with speed get an 85c bottle of Kruschen Salts from any live druggist anywhere in America with the distinct understanding that you must be satisfied with results or money back.

Great East Indian Festival

Kumbha-Mela is the mighty religious festival which occurs once every 14 years in India. It is then that some 17,000,000 people come to bathe at the junction of the three great rivers, Ganges, Jumnia and the underground Saraswati.

The next time you or the children need a laxative, try this famous doctor's prescription which aids the bowels without doing any harm. Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, containing pure senna and laxative herbs, is effective in a gentle and helpful way. Its action is thorough, but it never weakens the bowels. It stimulates muscular action and is thus actually good for the system. So remember Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin when coated tongue, fetid breath, headaches, nausea, jaded appetite or biliousness tells the need of a thorough cleansing. Druggists keep it in big bottles, or write Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, Monticello, Ill., for a free trial bottle.

BANKERS STUDY CHAIN - CHAIN BANKING

The Economic Policy Commission of the American Bankers Association has been specifically instructed by the general convention of the association to study and report on chain and group banking developments, and also on the proposal of the Comptroller of the Currency for an extension of branch banking in the national banking system, to permit those banks to conduct branches in the trade areas surrounding their locations.

R. S. Hecht, President Hibernia Bank and Trust Company, New Orleans, Louisiana, is chairman of the commission. The members are: George E. Roberts, Vice President National City Bank, New York, N. Y., vice chairman; Nathan Adams, President American Exchange National Bank, Dallas, Texas; Leonard P. Ayres, Vice President Cleveland Trust Co., Cleveland, Ohio; Frank W. Blair, Chairman of Board Union Trust Company, Detroit, Michigan; Walter W. Head, President Foreman-State National Bank, Chicago; W. D. Longyear, IVce President Security-First National Bank, Los Angeles, California; Walter S. McLucas, Chairman of Board Commerce Trust Company, Kansas City, Missouri; Max B. Nahm, Vice President Citizens National Bank, Bowling Green Kentucky; Melvin A. Traylor, President First National Bank, Chicago; Paul M. Warburg, Chairman of Board International Acceptance Bank, New York, N. Y.; O. Howard Wolfe, Cashier Philadelphia National Bank, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania; Gurden Edwards, American Bankers Association, New York City, secretary.

A survey showing the extent to which chain and group banking has developed in the United States has been made and issued in booklet form by the American Bankers Association of New York City.

N. S. A. News

Four hundred 4-H club members are expected to attend the annual Junior Short Course to be held at the Northwest School of Agriculture, Crookston, June 9-12. This Short Course is open to all boys and girls in Northwestern Minnesota between the ages of twelve and twenty-one.

H. A. Pfluphoeft, District Club leader, has arranged an attractive program of instruction demonstrations, contests, and entertainment. The instructional part of the program will include food preparation, clothing, canning, leadership, corn and potato growing, dairy calf, baby beef, sheep, pig, poultry, judging and gardening.

A leadership class will also be arranged for the leaders and older club members. Instructors include Miss Mildred Schenk, of the State Club department, and Miss Laura Gerber, of the National Dairy Council, together with members of the Northwest School faculty.

The total cost of board, room, and entertainment will be $3.00 Write the Northwest School of Agriculture, Crookston, for further information.

Waffles served at the Luthern Church Saturday evening.

"Thirty Years of Weather in the Red River Valley" is the title of a very useful bulletin prepared by R. S. Dunham, Agronomist of the Northwest School and Station, Crookston. Copies will be mailed to all interested parties free upon request.

Come And Help Shingle

Members of the congregation of the Nazareth Luthern Church are requested to meet at the church on May 30th for the purpose of shingling the church and clean up the premises, It is hoped that all will show their interest in this work by being there on that day and help do the work. The ladies will serve free lunch.

The steady rains and cloudy weather the past two weeks have taken the best out of our roads around here. The road to Thief River Falls and Greenbush has been in poor condition. The road to Warren by Viking got so bad that it was closed for the time being.

NOTICE!

THIS BANK WILL BE CLOSED ON SATURDAY AFTERNOONS COMMENCING WITH SATURDAY MAY 17TH AND WILL CONTINUE THRU THE MONTHS OF MAY, JUNE, JULY AND AUGUST.

To Our Patrons

May 10th we began making unsalted butter, to be used in the manufacture of ice cream.

We feel that the extra 1¾ cents a pound paid as primium for this butter will more than offset the creamery and the patrons for the extra care required.

Quoting C. W. Fryhofer, Federal and State butter inspector, "only high quality butter is desired and therefore it will be necessary to grade your cream even closer than you did when making salted butter."

We know you will do all you can to help us put out a good substantial profit on this butter. The creamery profit is your profit, so here's for more and better cream.

School Notes

High School

Everyone is busy preparin for the state board examinations starting Friday, May 23.

Laboratory work in all the science classes is being completed this week.

The faculty attended the Senior class play given at Thief River Falls last week.

Ruth Olson is absent from school this week because of a severe cold.

Superintendent R. B. Perry, of Borup, Minnesota, visited here on business last Saturday.

Billy: What word doesn't Miss Torblaa pronounce "right"?
Johnnie: "Wrong"!

Seventh and Eighth Grades

Arrangement is now being made for eighth grade graduation. The date will be announced next week.

The seventh and eighth grades are preparing for their state board examination; to be given the latter part of this month.

They have received free admission tickets to the North Dakota State Fair to be held at Grand Forks. This is a special for children, because, there are contests that will benefit thim with their school work.

Fifth and Sixth Grades

Willis Fluke and Margy Swan visited this room on Friday. We were glad so have them with us.

The baseball season has opened and several interesting teams have been organized. The Tigers and Wildcats are the opposing teams in the fifth grade. The Cubs and the Giants are the classing teams in the sixth grade. Due to inclement weather our progress has been greatly hampered.

We have been studying western scenery and in connection with this Miss Rognlie brought us a California Cactus plant.

Third and Fourth Grades

The 3rd and 4th grades have now completed their Japanese panels. A very attractive health house has just been erected on their sand table.

The 3rd and 4th graders have made the highest score ever made before in the Class Progress chart. Each grade having a score of nine.

First and Second Grades

It pays to be ambitious. New readers were presented to the second graders.

The lines on the spelling chart also show ambition; the lines have all gone up.

Francis Johnson brought a toad to school. The pupils were going to watch its action, but their plan was a failure, because the toad escaped and was nowhere to be found.

The garden is very successful. If it progsesses the way it did last week, creamed peas can be served very soon.

A reward will be given the first and second graders for eating hot cereals three times a week. The reward, a picture, will be mounted by the pupils. The name of the picture is 'The Boy and The Rabbit' by Raeburn.

Our Weekly Story Ends

With this issue of the News ends the story "Hate", which we have been publishing and which we know was a good story according to many of our subscribers.

Next week we will start a new story called "Beggars Can Choose", which deals with practically everything in life.

Bring your news items to our office or mail them to us.

The Nazareth Luthern Ladies Aid officers wish to thank the members for the cooperation shown in contributing to the Self Denial offering. 21 members contributed. The amount being $12.57, which has been sent to the general church budget.

Come And Eat Waffles

The Ladies Aid of the Nazareth Luthern Church will have a 17th of May gathering in the church basement Saturday evening They will serve all the hot waffles you can eat, with butter maple syrup, cake and coffee. The price will be 25 and 15 cents

Serving starts at 6.p. m. and continues to 9. p. m., or until all are served.

Come and bring your friends and enjoy a social evening. The money raised thru this waffle supper will be used in paying for the matrial in shingling the north side of the church roof.

Has Up-To-Date Restaurant

Theo Ness, owner of the Holt Cafe has made some more extensive improvements to his restaurant. Last week he installed a new Kelvinator ice box in the kitchen and, a new fountain keg.

During the few years he has been in business here, Mr. Ness has arranged his place of business in such a way that it comes in class with the best of restaurants in the northwest,

4-H Club To Meet

The Holt 4-H Club will meet at the Holt School on Tuesday. Mr. Pflughoeft will be there to help reorganize the club. All who wish to join are urged to be present.

As administrator I have Real Estate properties for sale at reasonable prices.
T. B. Folden, Holt Minn.

O. J. Johnson
For 5th District Commissioner

Having filed for the office of Commissioner for the Fifth District, Marshall County, to be voted upon at the Primary election, I shall, if elected, feel it my duty to serve the whole of my district impartially and do all I can to better the highways of the district economically.

I invite your vote and support.

Fricker Filed

Geo. Fricker, Cashier of the Marshall County State Bank here, cast his hat in the political ring this week when he filed for the office of County Commissioner from the fifth Commissioners District.

He will be opposed by O. J. Johnson of Grygla, the only other candidate who has filed for that office so far.

A. C. McMillan of Gatzke, who has filled this position for several years has decided to quit the political game.

Mr. Fricker came here several years ago and has been in charge of the local bank here since. He is well qualified for the office he seeks.

Play Day Posponed

The Annual Play Day and Field Meet which was scheduled to be held at Warren on Saturday, May 17th, has been indefinitely postponed according to word received from N. M. Engen, County Supt. of Schools.

The late rains have made the roads so bad that it would be difficult for many to be able to get to Warren tomorrow.

Read Our New Story

Our new serial, "Beggars Can Choose", is a real love story- a story of maid and man, husband and wife—which deals with all the problems of married life excepting infidelity and the over stressed triangle. It is also a story about Chicago- the good and bad sides of the city- and everything concerning the modern Babylon is sure to be of interst. As the title implies, it is tale which disproves the old adage, "Beggars cannot be choosers". Be sure to get the opening installment The News.

Have your supper at the Nazareth Lutheran Church Saturday evening, May 17th.

Will Gravel Road

The Minnesota trunk highway grading program was brougt to a total of 275 mi. last week when contracts were awarded for 65.5 miles of construction. Contracts had been previously let for 210 miles of grading. Several more grading Jobs will be let from time to time during the summer Commissioner C. M. Babcock states.

Bids were also opened last week on 90 miles of gravel surfacing on routes where grading was completed last fall or this spring. Additional graveling contracts will be let from time to time during the summer whenever any grading project is completed. Where paving is contemplated, it is the general rule to to apply light gravel to carry traffic for a year or more, to give time for the new grade to settle.

S. J. Reader of Minneapolis got the contract for graveling the new State Highway No. 32 from here to Greenbush and 2½ east from Greenbush on no. 11. The job calls for 24.720 yards of gravel at a cost of $20,148. The local gravel pit will be located on a farm three and a half miles north of Holt.

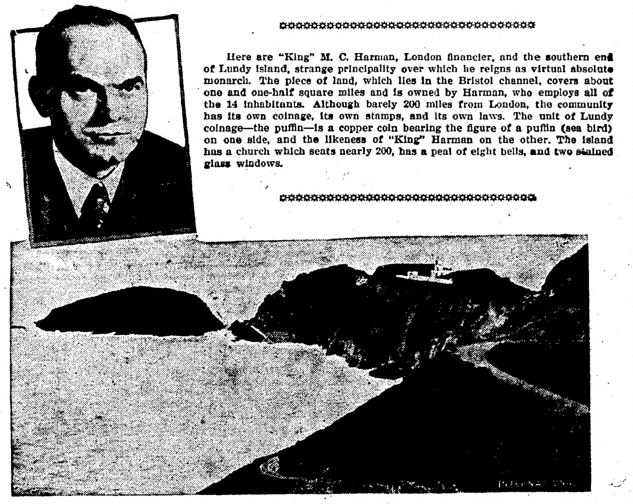
Little Lundy Island and Its King, M. C. Harman



Here are "King" M. C. Harman, London financier, and the southern end of Lundy island, strange principality over which he reigns as virtual absolute monarch. The piece of land, which lies in the Bristol channel, covers about one and one-half square miles and is owned by Harman, who employs all of the 14 inhabitants. Although barely 200 miles from London, the community has its own coinage, its own stamps, and its own laws. The unit of Lundy coinage—the puffin—is a copper coin bearing the figure of a puffin (sea bird) on one side, and the likeness of "King" Harman on the other. The island has a church which seats nearly 200, has a peal of eight bells, and two stained glass windows.

Globe Circling Record His Aim

John Henry Mears Will Attempt to Beat Time of Zeppelin.

Camden, N. J.—No one is watching the return voyage of Rear Admiral Richard Evelyn Byrd from his Antarctic adventures with more expectancy than John Henry Mears, America's famous round-the-world racer.

Mears, whose greatest aim in life, apparently, is to circumnavigate the globe faster than any other human being, is hard at work here mastering the art of flying in preparation for his next attempt to bring back to the United States the record for globe circumnavigation.

He wants to be a capable pilot before next June when he and Bernt Balchen, Rear Admiral Byrd's famous co-pilot, will attempt to lower the record of 21 days made last year by the Graf Zeppelin for a round-the-world flight. Balchen is at present with Byrd but Mears expects him here about the end of May to complete plans for the flight.

Instructor Lauds Mears.

Bill Day, a local pilot, who is teaching Mears to fly, said the New Yorker is going to make a "corking good pilot." Day is a wartime flyer and has been an instructor most of the time since.

Mears, who has made two previous round-the-world records, knows full well the strain on a pilot in such an undertaking and he is determined to be fully capable of taking over the controls from Balchen periodically during the proposed flight which will include considerable transoceanic flying.

The next attempt by Mears and Balchen will be made in a plane capable of exceeding 175 miles per hour with a cruising speed of 140 miles per hour.

Circled Globe in 23 Days.

Among Mears' accomplishments in circumnavigating the globe in record time is his 35-day record in 1913. In that speed test he employed trains, steamship, and a short hop in an airplane which ended in a forced landing in Puget Sound.

In 1928 Mears and the late Capt. C. B. D. Collyer lowered the round-the-world time to 23 days. They used the City of New York, a heavy monoplane, for the major portion of the trip. Collyer was killed in a crash in Arizona some months later while attempting to establish a new transcontinental record.

Discussing the round-the-world flying, Mears was quite serious when he declared he was convinced that within 25 years the journey can be made in 24 hours.

"With new developments coming every day," Mears said, "Who can deny that a flying speed of 1,000 miles per hour is not possible in 25 years? New type engines, new methods of construction, rocket propulsion and the like will make anything possible, in my opinion. Twenty-five years from now we will look back at present flying speeds and laugh."

Chicken Thief Sends $4 for Loot He Found Tough

Elizabeth, N. J.—A letter with four $1 bills enclosed was received today by Albert V. Burns of 528 Walnut street.

The note read, "Please accept this money for chickens taken from your hen house some time ago. They were far from tender, sorry." Mr. Burns says that several chickens were stolen from him about a month ago.

Milady to Decorate Her Legs in Paris

Paris.—Paris is introducing many fantastic ankle decorations. Some of the latest samples have long, thin clocks which wind up and around the leg, others have anklets of colored embroideries, or painted animal heads, garlands of flowers, and cob-web traceries.

There are also painted butterflies with brilliants woven into the silk to outline the pattern of the wings, and black and colored patches on the heels rising in a triple tier above the back of the shoe.

STATISTICS REVEAL FARM-TO-CITY DRIFT SLACKENS

Rural Population Is Still Dwindling But at Lower Rate, Government Finds.

Washington, D. C.—Gradual slackening in the trend from farm to city with indications that the population is becoming stabilized were noted in studies made public by the Agriculture department.

The farm population still is dwindling, though more slowly than heretofore. It is estimated there are 27,222,000 persons on farms, or less than at any time within twenty years. The farm population has decreased by 5,000,000 since 1910.

The movement from farm to city has been gradually diminishing in volume, however, for some years until in 1929 it included 1,876,000 persons compared with more than 2,000,000 in earlier years.

Movement of farm families to cities in the last twenty years, it was pointed out, has established many ties and associations between rural and urban families that have gone far to create a homogeneous population. The 12,000,000 farm-bred persons living in cities were said to have linked virtually every farm home at some time or other with some city family.

Study of the yearly change in farm population reveals a definite relationship between the population drift and the condition of agriculture and business. Data covering the last seven years shows that an improvement in farm income always has been accompanied by a similar movement of population from farms.

Because of unemployment conditions now prevailing in cities there is a plentiful supply of farm labor and farm wages are lower than in eight years. They range from $23.50 with board to $53.94.

Bridge Players Hit in Arkansas Court Ruling

Little Rock, Ark.—Action of two judges against bridge playing in Arkansas cities has roused considerable comment over the state.

Judge Cravette of Blytheville has announced that so long as women who play bridge for prizes are not molested he will "go easy" on crapshooters brought before him.

Judge S. A. Miller of Pine Bluff followed with the announcement he would fine all Sunday bridge players brought before him, even if they were "just playing for fun."

Once Famous English Jockey Is 102 Years Old

Appleford, England.—Known as a jockey of prominence 70 years ago, John Faulkner recently celebrated his one hundred and second birthday. As a youth he rode at 63 pounds, and it is on record that he received three pence (about a nickel) for his first race. He has been twice married and is the father [illegible] children.

The door closed behind the four, and as if the click of the latch had been a signal Cara rose from her chair. Her eyes were brown pools, flecked with star-glint, and it seemed to Fellowes that he was sinking gradually, gratefully, into the infinite mystery of their depths. Here, rekindled for him, was the subtle glamor that had lured him from Perenha to Lisbon, and from Lisbon aboard the True Bounty, its embers glowing rosier with every breath he drew. He leaned toward her, and suddenly she was in his arms, her lips lifted frankly to his.

"Forgive me," he whispered.

"Ah, dearest—" her fingers stroked his lacerated back—"I have your stripes to answer for, however innocent I was."

Here, Rekindled for Him, Was the Subtle Glamor That Had Lured Him From Perenha to Lisbon.

"They're but scars," he protested.

"So they're not scars on your memory," she murmured, and nestled closer.

CHAPTER XVI

Mrs. Rhodes Makes Up Her Mind

"Easy, Pete! Whoa, thar, Paul!"

Jeff Riggle caught the thong of his whip around the butt, and climbed creakily down from his seat, as the Widow Rhodes emerged from the side door of the General Armstrong into the spring twilight of the inn yard.

"Late as usual," she sniffed. "B'en stopin' off ag'in to see that hussy daown to Floyd-Jones', hey?"

"Allus b'lieve the wusst of a man, daon't ye?" Jeff countered. "Anyone 'ud be late, carryin' the load I did."

"'Tain't noticeable," she remarked, peering into the coach's empty interior.

"Set 'em off back a piece," affirmed Jeff. "Squire's to home."

Mrs. Rhodes became alert.

"Lion Fellowes? Home? Why, ye footless loon! Keepin' all the news back from a body!"

"Naow, naow, M'randy, ye ain't give me time to flap my jaw, I was all sot to tell ye, and—"

"Go on, lummox! Tell me! Has he got his health? Haow'd he do privateerin'?"

"Done fine. Married."

"Married!" The widow's tone was falsetto. "Aprivateerin'? Be ye crazy?"

"Shore, he's married. Thatair Miss Inglepin was up to Chater's. Reck'lect?"

"Waall, I vum," exclaimed the widow. "Guess I better git my bonnet, 'n' hustle up to the Manor. They'll be needin' help more'n likely."

"Oh, they got aplenty help," Jeff assured her. "Thatair Portygee woman—only she ain't Portygee, she's Irish, name o' McCarthy, and talks nigh as much as ye do, M'randy—"

"Huh! I'll thank ye not to be couplin' me with an outlandish furriner the shape of a bar'l of salt pork!"

"Shore," drawled Jeff, "but ye kin say this for a fat woman. She ain't so short in her temper."

"Any woman 'ud be short-tempered with a tight-mouthed ninny hadn't more'n hoss talk on his tongue! Git along, do! Who else come with Squire?"

"Nimrod Sopher. The rest o' the Babylon fellers stayed into the city. Spendin' prize money."

"They would," the widow observed grimly. "Anyone else?"

"That mahog'ny-colored feller, Tom, 'n' his niggerman—only he ain't Tom's nigger no more 'cause Squire Fellowes—or mebbe 'twas Miss' Fellowes—it's kinder hard to make out haow they done it—bought him off o' Tom."

Mrs. Rhodes' eye brightened visibly.

"Do tell!" she cried. "Why thatair Tom must have a heap o' money, Jeff."

"But money doan't never do a sailor no good," asserted Jeff. "And the best of 'em air uneasy fellers, allus up 'n' away, jest when ye figger ye got 'em tied daown."

"I'd like to see the man, sailor or no, could git away from me, short o' the Heavenly trump," commented the widow.

"Waall, naow, if 'twore me, thar wouldn't be no need to keep him from gittin' away," propounded Jeff. "I had it on my mind quite a time, M'randy, to talk things over with ye."

"Save yer breath," advised Mrs. Rhodes. "Did ye hear haow much prize money Tom got?"

Jeff's response was unintelligible, and he turned to the task of unharnessing his team; but the widow reached out a lean arm, and grappled him to her.

"None o' that with me, Jeff Riggle," she ordered. "Answer my question."

"Haow'd I knaow? Ask him yerself."

"As if ye didn't worm into every bit o' news along the road," she scoffed. "Haow much?"

After a hopeless wriggle, Jeff answered sullenly:

"They do say squire give Tom all his share o' the prize money."

"Squire's share? Glory be! But haow much?"

"Four-five thousand dollars."

Her arm fell beside her.

"Land's sake! All that money for a nigger-man?"

"Squire 'n' Mis' Fellowes air purty fond o' Cuffee."

"Oh, Cuffee's a good nigger! But—All that for him! I vum! And Tom innercent as a cradle babe!"

Her head sank in reflection, while Jeff regarded her more anxiously than before.

"I got a ter'ble hunger, M'randy," he said. "Haow 'baout a snack to eat?"

She didn't hear him. Her eye was scanning the inn structure with a calculating efficiency.

"Mebbe 'twould be a good scheme to change the name," she murmured.

"Ye jest changed it," objected Jeff.

"I knaow, but the war ain't goin' to last much longer. And folks won't think much o' sojers. "The Sailor's Rest!" That 'ud be a good one. Kinder appealin', too. Make a man feel to home. Course, we'd need a new sign, but that pig fits into any pictur', and a handy man—"

"M'randy, ye ain't fixin' to throw me over?" gulped Jeff. "Ye ain't goin' to go 'n' tangle yerself with this leettle, hairy sailor that wont draw two sober breaths ashore?"

"I'll thank ye to keep a civil tongue in yer head where Tom's consarned," the widow retorted briskly. "And I ain't throwin' ye over—thar ain't nothin' betwixt us to throw, Jeff Riggle. Jest 'cause I've let ye order me 'raound like I was yer wife, which the dear Lord knaows I'd never dream of bein', not while thar was a single other man left able to draw britches onto his legs, ain't no reason why ye should presoom to try to boss 'n' bother me. Git along, naow! Unhitch them hosses, 'n' bed 'em daown. If ye want a bite, thar's a ham in the cold cupboard, 'n' fire for a dish o' tea."

"But whar ye goin', M'randy?" he wailed as she started to sail out of the yard.

"Goin'? Why, of course, I'm going to see what I kin do for squire 'n' Mis' Fellowes."

"Figgerin' to marry Tom right off?" he snarled. "Mebbe he'll have somethin' to say for hisself."

"He's a sensible man, Tom is," she retorted. "And thar's more to a sailor 'n' thar is to a stage driver."

Bitterness welled up in Jeff's heart.

"Yes, and more'n one wife most gen'rally."

"Not if he's married to M'randy Rhodes," the widow returned, undisturbed. "I calc'late to keep a man so busy he won't hanker after sin—which is what I'm goin' to tell Mis' Fellowes. Not that squire ain't a decent, young man, but men air men, and all Nimrod Sopher's law learnin' won't change 'em."

[THE END.]

No Stop Sign

Little Charles, only three years old, likes to visit his grandmother, who lives in English avenue. He can go out his back gate and across the alley to her back gate very easily. He and his little brother and sister are quarantined with the whooping cough, therefore he cannot go visiting. He was begging his mother to let him go to grandma's when she told him he could not go over there while the sign was on the house.

Charles quickly replied: "The sign isn't on the back of the house."—Indianapolis News.

"Black Monday"

Stow's Chronicle relates that the original Black Monday was on April 14, 1360—the "morrow after Easter." King Edward III, with his army, "lay before the city of Paris, which day was full dark of mist and hail and so bitter cold that many men died on their horsebacks with cold; wherefore until this day it hath been called 'Black Monday.'"

Clothes Pin

Bernice, age four and a half, on seeing a safety pin on her mother's dress, said: "Mother, may I have that clothes pin?"

Mother, somewhat surprised, replied: "Dear, that isn't a clothes pin."

Bernice, thinking for a moment, remarked: "Well, mother, it closes, doesn't it?"

When Food Sours

Lots of folks who think they have "indigestion" have only an acid condition which could be corrected in five or ten minutes. An effective anti-acid like Phillips Milk of Magnesia soon restores digestion to normal.

Phillips does away with all that sourness and gas right after meals. It prevents the distress so apt to occur two hours after eating. What a pleasant preparation to take! And how good it is for the system! Unlike a burning dose of soda—which is but temporary relief at best—Phillips Milk of Magnesia neutralizes many times its volume in acid.

NATION'S CLOCKS TO BE REPLACED

New Timepieces to Have Some Novel Features.

Washington.—In three airtight glass cases in Washington are the three master clocks which, of all clocks in the United States, run with the least variation. Maintained by and kept in the United States Naval observatory, they are the timepieces by which the nation lives, moves and has its being; they are the standard by which we set each watch and clock throughout the United States. Now, after many years, new clocks are to be installed in the observatory.

A Munich clock-maker named Riefler is the maker of the standard clocks now in use. Riefler's clocks derive their accuracy from the manner in which the pendulum is attached. In ordinary clocks the pendulum is attached to springs in the rigid clock frame. In Riefler's clocks, however, it is attached to springs connected to small tables which rock back and forth slightly. Electro magnets wind the springs every 30 seconds.

The new standard clocks which, according to Capt. C. S. Freeman, superintendent of the observatory, will be purchased soon include devices aimed at an accuracy superior to that of all other clocks. Known as "Shortt" clocks, they are constructed with the idea of freeing the pendulum of the job of unlocking the escapement. To do this, a secondary or "slave" clock is used which releases an impulse lever. Although the arrangement is complex, a high degree of perfection has been reached. The pendulum swings once every minute.

Taking care of the nation's timepieces involves an accurate care. The airtight cases holding them are kept in a double vault with automatic temperature control. Year in and year out the temperature in this vault is kept constant within one-tenth of one degree centigrade. Once a week the temperature vault is entered for inspection.

Any variation in the clocks is carefully recorded, since the hands are adjusted to the correct time only when overhauls are made—every four years. Wires running to various parts of the observatory grounds make it possible to keep check on the ticks in the time room and in the various telescopes.

European Gull Flies Over Atlantic Ocean

Boston, Mass.—A lone flyer has apparently conquered the perilous westward traverse of the North Atlantic ocean, previously accomplished by only two craft, the German monoplane Bremen and the mighty Graf Zeppelin.

A European black headed gull, the first of its species ever recorded in North America, was found consorting with native gulls at Newburyport on the north shore several weeks ago.

Ornithologists could offer no more logical explanation for the bird's presence here than that it winged its way over the Atlantic, succeeding where Nungesser, Coli, Idzikowski, and other brave aviators had failed.

They believed the gull might have been driven out to sea in a gale and pointed out that it was not one of a maritime species which follow vessels for days.

The gull has been captured and placed on exhibition at the Museum of Natural History here.

Old Indian Fighter, 104, Enjoys Ride in Airplane

Elko, Nev.—Jim Mulligan enjoyed all the thrills of Indian fighting and other experiences of the early West, but he lived 104 years before he worked up enough courage to take an airplane ride. He celebrated his one hundred and fourth birthday with a ride in the skies, and he declared that thrill surpassed all others of his life. "We could have raised Ned with the Indians if we had one of these," he shouted to the pilot.

Indestructible Money

Paris.—A Swiss scientist, M. U. Schoop, has announced a method of making paper money which cannot be destroyed. His process consists of treating the paper pulp with a coating of tin. This coating, applied by an atomizer, is broken up into minute particles, thus giving the paper a flexibility and protection against tearing and burning.

Paris.—A letter of James Fennimore Cooper to General Lafayette is worth only $42 on the Paris market. This sum was recently paid for an authentic letter of the novelist Cooper to the soldier Lafayette when it was put up for auction in one of the largest art auction rooms of Paris.

The letter was dated December 5, 1826, and conveyed the sorrow of the American novelist at the news of the death of the Lafayette's son-in-law.

BARES REVENGE IN KILLING OF BRIDE

Murderer Leaves Note for Young Husband.

Ottawa.—With the self-confessed slayer already under arrest, police are still seeking to unravel a web of mystery which shrouds the death of Mrs. Olga James, nineteen-year-old bride of Reginald James.

William Neilson, sixty-one, has confessed that he strangled the young woman in her home, leaving a note to her husband as follows:

"This is your dirty work, that you have done on me. It may be a lesson to you not to treat any other man that way. You got this woman to play the most rotten game she could play on a man. Now see what you have done."

Keeps Motive Secret.

But Neilsen, although admitting the crime, still maintains silence as to the motive which prompted him, and refuses to explain the note which he left. The slayer, a painter by trade, was employed in decorating the James home last fall, just after James and his bride had moved into it. He still retained a key to the front door, police state, and effected an entry in this way.

James discovered his wife dead when he returned home for lunch. She lay in her bedroom, still in her nightdress, a six foot length of cord from a window sash weight knotted around her throat.

Trace Slayer.

Neighbors told of having seen an elderly man enter the James home soon after the husband had left it in the morning. The contractor who had built the home stated that the description fitted Neilson, one of the painters who had been engaged on the house. Police arrested Neilson, a widower, at his rooming house, and found bloodstains on his clothes.

Mrs. James was well known in Ottawa's younger social set, being the daughter of Edward Nelson, secretary-treasurer of the Ottawa Institute for the Blind.

West Point Is Worried by Lack of Territory

West Point, N. Y.—The United States Military academy here faces a serious problem because of the lack of its own water supply, aviation field and inadequate space for its artillery ranges, according to Maj. Gen. William R. Smith, superintendent.

It may even be necessary to move the one hundred and fifty-year-old institution from its present site in order to remedy this, Maj. Gen. Smith said.

The academy gets its water from two near-by lakes, both off its property, when there is an overflow. When there is no overflow, the academy gets no water, according to Maj. Gen. Smith.

He said the use of the old artillery range has been rendered impossible by building of Storm King road, and that the only desirable airplane landing field is the Cragston club property, nearby. The academy expends $25,000 annually to send its pupils to an aviation training, he said.

Bandit Quits Holdup for Limberger Cheese

Newark, N. J.—Resting an arm on the counter, a timorous bandit hesitantly displayed an automatic revolver to Edward Cohen, delicatessen dealer, of 133 Wilson avenue, the other day, and said: "Hand over $10."

Cohen demurred.

"Why should I give you $10? I'll buy the gun, maybe," he said.

The bandit looked doubtful.

"I can't get up the nerve to shoot you," he sighed. "I ought to do it, I suppose."

Moments of embarrassed silence on the part of both followed. "Well, give me a quarter's worth of cheese—limberger," the bandit said finally and threw down a quarter. Cohen complied and watched his bandit-customer disappear. That's the story he told later to Detectives Joseph J. Kenny and John F. Bowbliss.

Sword of Stuyvesant Given to N. Y. Museum

New York.—Peter Stuyvesant's sword, worn by the last Dutch colonial governor of New York nearly 300 years ago, has been presented to the Museum of the City of New York by De Lancey Kounze, according to announcement from the museum. The sword is 27½ inches long, with a wooden grip and a tightly laced leather scabbard bound in brass.

Through six generations the weapon came down to Henry Stuyvesant, who died in 1919. The latter gave the sword to Mrs. Annie Parsons Kounze, his cousin, in 1895. She in turn gave it to her son, the present donor.

Child's Fists Rout Dog After Attack on Brother

San Francisco.—Without even looking for a club, Laura McFarland, thirteen years old, beat off with her bare fists a police dog that had attacked her four-year-old brother while the latter was petting the animal. The attack took place in the woods near here and after driving off the dog Laura carried her brother through a dense growth of poison ivy to the road and hailed a passing car.

Doctors said the boy, although severely torn by the dog's fangs, would recover.

SUDDENLY FINDS HIS ARM IS GONE

Man Is Victim of Mysterious Accident.

Biddeford, Maine.—Victim of one of the most mysterious accidents ever reported to local authorities, George Thomas, twenty-five, of Winchester, Mass., lies in the Trull hospital here. Driving through the town of Wells with Aubrey Stott, Winchester, and Albro McCullough of Malden, Thomas lost his arm and he doesn't know how he did it.

The three were near the post office and store at Moody in the town of Wells, when they met a large truck. Soon after the machines passed each other, Thomas remarked to his companions that his left arm felt numb. They halted by the roadside and when he turned around he discovered that his arm was gone, while blood was pouring from the stump near the shoulder. The arm had been severed as cleanly as though shaved off with a huge axe with razored edge. Stott and McCullough, who could scarcely believe what they had seen, jumped from the car, began to look around, and going back a short distance they found Thomas' arm lying in the road.

Although bleeding profusely, Thomas continued to drive until they reached the store and there was given first-aid by a physician before being brought to the hospital.

Examination of his car here showed that the door handle on the left-hand side was missing and it is believed that some very sharp projection on the passing truck struck Thomas, though he declared he felt no blow.

Eyebrows Are Again O. K. Despite Beauty Doctors

Paris.—Eyebrows are in again in Paris and despite the opposition of beauty doctors the plucking fad is definitely out.

The revolt of fashionable women against the style that gave faces the bald and slightly astonished expression of a female Buddha just recovering from an electric shock, and which in addition was extremely painful, has been widely remarked by observers of such phenomena in this wayward capital.

"It is momentous, the return of the eyebrows," declares Gisele de Biezville, one of the most noted French authorities on feminine vagaries. "It means the return of personality. It won't be considered vulgar any more for women to reveal a little of their natures.

"It is well known eyebrows are terribly revelatory, particularly of the passions."

Beauty experts, however, are taking some comfort in the fact that legions of women who had their eyebrows eradicated with electric needles won't be able to get them back.

Tear Gas New Weapon Against Prison Riots

Washington.—Chemical warfare officers announced development of a tear gas weapon more suitable to quelling prison riots than the comparatively slow-acting grenade now in general use.

Prison authorities, the War department said, had asked for a tear gas weapon which would quickly produce a more highly concentrated cloudy gas. Officers devised a tear gas candle, samples of which have been sent to Governors Island, New York, for experimentation.

The candle is thrown, but ignites so rapidly after leaving the hand that quantities of fumes are being given off by the time the missile strikes.

Auctioneer at Farm Sale Sells Buggy for Nickel

Allentown, Pa.—"Thanks for the buggy ride" apparently is an obsolete phrase in Lehigh country. Recently at Lynnport an auctioneer presiding at a sale of farm goods couldn't draw any enthusiasm when he offered "a fine buggy, with rubber tires an' everything" for sale. Finally a spectator, in jest, offered a nickel. He got the buggy whether he wanted it or not.

Dog Hero of Utah Eats Poisoned Food and Dies

Ogden, Utah. — Utah's "meanest man" set out some poison that killed Bruno, Ogden's hero dog. The big Newfoundland was presented with a collar, a medal, and a wreath of roses after he saved the life of Alice Turner, five, in 1925, and was widely known and loved. Children and adults alike mourn his death.

Former German Ruler Wayside Inn Doorman

Berlin.—The duke of Saxe-Altenberg, formerly the sovereign of a tiny German state, was "compensated" after the revolution. As he received the money in paper currency, his income amounted to only $300 a year. Until recently he had been living in a shooting lodge, which is worth about $1,500. A few days ago the bailiffs drove the former sovereign out of this last refuge because he owed $5,000 to various creditors. He has now obtained a job as a door-opener at a wayside German inn.

Family doctor's laxative instead of harsh purges; trial bottle Free

Old Dr. Caldwell's prescription cannot form the cathartic habit. It can be given to the child whose tongue is coated, or whose breath is fetid, or has a little fever. Or to older people whose bowels are clogged. Its ingredients stimulate muscular action and thus aid the bowels to more normal functioning. The pure senna and laxative herbs in Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin are good for the system. So do not hesitate to use it when there's biliousness, headaches, or any sign of constipation. Your druggist has this world-famous prescription in big bottles. Or, write Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, Monticello, Ill., and a free trial bottle will be sent to you, postpaid.

Experiment Prove That "Mulching" Helps Crops

For many years Hawaiian sugar planters made a practice of leaving the crop refuse, such as leaves and tops, between the rows of growing cane. This served the double purpose of conserving the moisture in the soil and keeping down the weed growth. Later the experiment was made of covering the ground between the rows with a cheap grade of asphalt paper, and still later the entire field was so covered when it was found that the stiff shoots of the cane would penetrate the paper, while weeds would not. These differing processes are known as mulching. The same thing is now done with the pineapple crop, holes being made in the paper so that the pineapples can grow through. Experiments made in the United States in mulching various vegetables are said to have resulted in production increases of from 30 to 500 or 600 per cent. It is said that 12 days after a rain soil protected with paper mulch will contain as much as 20 per cent more moisture than unmulched soil in the same vicinity.

An Ailing CHILD

Are you prepared to render first aid and quick comfort the moment your youngster has an upset of any sort? Could you do the right thing—immediately—though the emergency came without warning—perhaps tonight? Castoria is a mother's standby at such times. There is nothing like it in emergencies, and nothing better for everyday use. For a sudden attack of colic, or the gentle relief of constipation; to allay a feverish condition, or to soothe a fretful baby that can't sleep. This pure vegetable preparation is always ready to ease an ailing youngster. It is just as harmless as the recipe on the wrapper reads. If you see Chas. H. Fletcher's signature, it is genuine Castoria. It is harmless to the smallest infant; doctors will tell you so.

You can tell from the recipe on the wrapper how mild it is, and how good for little systems. But continue with Castoria until a child is grown.

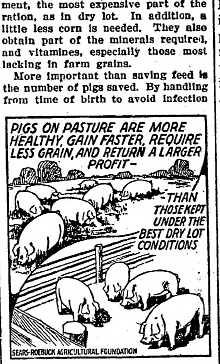
Experiments have shown that pigs properly fed on pasture will return a profit over feed cost about twice as great as those fed excellent rations in dry lot, says the Sears-Roebuck Agricultural Foundation.

When on pasture, hogs need only about half as much protein supplement, the most expensive part of the ration, as in dry lot. In addition, a little less corn is needed. They also obtain part of the minerals required, and vitamines, especially those most lacking in farm grains.

More important than saving feed is the number of pigs saved. By handling from time of birth to avoid infection from intestinal worms and bacterial diseases found in old hog lots, about 25 per cent more can be saved on pasture and there are no runts. The protein, minerals, and vitamines obtained, the succulent feed, the exercise, sunlight, and better sanitation, all add to their health and thrift.



PIGS ON PASTURE ARE MORE HEALTHY, GAIN FASTER, REQUIRE LESS GRAIN, AND RETURN A LARGER PROFIT-
-THAN THOSE KEPT UNDER THE BEST DRY LOT CONDITIONS
SEARS-ROEBUCK AGRICULTURAL FOUNDATION

Alfalfa, red and alsike clover, rape, soy beans, and oats and peas are among the best pasture for hogs, the Foundation continues. Sweet clover, blue grass, rye, timothy, sudan grass and amber sorghum may be used for short periods. Four or five acres of fertile land seeded to oats and rape this spring will supply pasture for 100 pigs for several months.

Thirty Two States Have Gas Tax Higher Than Minnesota

Here's another evidence that Minnesota motor car taxes are not excessive. Two thirds of the states, or thirty-two to be exact have a gas tax higher than the three cent tax which is in force in Minnesota. One state has a 3½ cent tax, nineteen have four cents, nine have five cents and three have six cents.

Eight states besides Minnesota have a three cent tax and seven states and the District of Columbia have a two cent tax.

As An Agriculturalist Sees Farm Board's Job

The new Agricultural Marketing Act approaches farm relief from a materially different point of view from that of former bills before Congress in recent years, says Dean H. L. Russell of Wisconsin University College of Agriculture in the American Bankers Association Journal.

"It contains a new idea, fraught with the greatest possibilities—the organization of a Federal Farm Board," he says. "It has been possible for farm cooperatives to borrow from Federal-aided institutions before, and at a materially lower rate than city business men had to pay for working capital, but this is the first set-up made by the government in which a commission has been carefully chosen to give undivided attention to an effort to solve the problems of a farm group.

"It is hard to conceive of a higher degree of responsibility than must be assumed by this commission. No board ever created by congressional action has been clothed with as wide plenary powers. It is authorized not only to advise but to execute, to plan and put its plans into effective action, to buy and hold, to dump, to dip into the Federal treasury to accomplish its ends with what would be almost unlimited resources to any private commercial concern. The board's only job is to succeed, and no governmental agency even during the war time emergency had a wider latitude.

"Many will think the farm relief program will be universally applicable to the individual land owner or operator. Such procedure is far from the case. Aid is to be extended through cooperative organizations by making it possible for such groups to obtain cash advances to hold crops so as to permit of more orderly marketing.

"While the primary relation is with cooperatives, the individual or unorganized farmer will also profit by the activities of his organized fellows. If a stabilized program of merchandising is able to eliminate the surpluses that exert such depressing influence on prices the general price relation should be improved. If this occurs the individual farmer should also benefit.

"It is here the government is proposing a novel attempt in economics. Through stabilization corporations for each commodity it is proposed to make possible the handling of the surplus so as to lessen its disturbing influence on prices. With non-perishable products such a program is, of course, conceivably possible, but one wonders what would happen if a stabilization corporation had to handle a perishable crop in great quantities.

"Is it going to be possible for a stabilization corporation to stabilize? It would be one thing if it had merely to stabilize the American situation, but often that situation is complicated with world conditions. Perhaps the very fact that such a stabilization corporation is in position to function may have a steadying effect on the market.

"Markets respond to psychological stimuli as do individuals. The very fact that the government has now definitely stepped into the breach with all of its resources available to make the new plan work will exert undoubtedly a strong stabilizing effect.

"It would be presumptuous to forecast what the ultimate effect of the new act will be. It can, however, be definitely stated that in the present plan much of the philosophy that had been so drastically criticized as economically unsound has been eliminated. The existing plan is worth trying. It will undoubtedly cost the Federal treasury no inconsiderable amounts of money, but if it produces the hoped-for result it will have been well worth while."

Sam Lorentson, owner of the new Standard Oil Filling Station on the Main Street corner, completed the work of installing the the new equipment there this week.

To Our Patrons

Now is the time to be on the look out for grassy and weedy flavors in your cream. Flavors that show up even with the best of care.

Cream may be ever so sweet and still will go for second grade, just because it has that grassy flavor, which makes it unfit for use in Land O' Lakes butter.

By taking the cows off pasture two or three hours before milking, and by thoroughly stirring while cooling the cream it is possible to do away with a good deal of these off flavors.

Read Our New Story

Our new serial, "Beggars Can Choose", is a real love story- a story of maid and man, husband and wife—which deals with all the problems of married life excepting infidelity and the over stressed triangle. It is also a story about Chicago- the good and bad sides of the city- and everything concerning the modern Babylon is sure to be of interst. As the title implies, it is tale which disproves the old adage, "Beggars cannot be choosers". Be sure to get the opening installment in The News starting this week.

Evenson's Moved Here

Mr. and Mrs. Nels Evenson arrived here recently from Minneapolis and are at the present time staying at the home of their daughter and son-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. B. C. Heinze.

Mr. Evenson owns a good farm near Bronson which he rented out last fall on a three year contract. They have rented the Martin Matton farm and will move there in a short time. The people of Holt and communty bid them welcome here.

Big Crowd Attended Supper

The Nazareth Lutheran Ladies Aid waffle supper held at church basement on Saturday evening was well attended.

Everybody enjoyed the waffles which were a real treat.

The proceeds from the supper where $30 from which $6 were used for buying groceries for the supper, the balance of the things needed were donated by the members of the Aid. The $24 balance will be used in procuring material for shingling the church roof.

Mrs. Fred Peterson and two daughters, Mary Peterson and Mrs. C. O. Saastad spent Saturday at Thief River Falls.

Chauffeurs Examination

A series of examinations will be given in many Minnesota cities during the next few weeks for chauffeurs, according to an announcement from Mike Holm, secretary of state. An examination will be given in Warren on Friday, May 30, at 12:30 p. m. at Stephen on Thursday, May 29 at 7:30 p. m. and at Thief River Falls on Friday evening May 30, at 7 p.m. Applicants for the examinations are requested to communicate with the sheriff or chief of police to secure the proper application blanks for the examination. The law provides that operators of commercial vehicles and all chauffeurs driving motor vehicles on public highways must be properly licensed by the secretary of state.

First Kittenball Game

The first Kitten Ball game of the season was played here on Tuesday evening when, the married men of the village played the single men.

The score was 16 to 19 in favor of the married.

Here we see Chicago with its fine families, its beautiful homes, its great buildings; and then we see its poverty, its tenements, its bootleggers and its gangsters. And thus it is a colorful panorama that makes a background for characters who are as vivid and real as the people you find every day about you.

Margaret W. Jackson.

When the daughter of a well-to-do family makes a runaway match with the carpenter's son, the family, naturally, objects. The theme is not new. It is a famous complication of real life which, in its various angles, has provided inspiration ever since poets began to sing and novelists to write.

This is a story of youth and love that is as new and refreshing as the first violet of spring, yet its problems are those which might have confronted a pair of lovers at the dawn of civilization; but in this case they are settled in a truly modern manner, with the advantages of decision which common sense, freedom of thought and freedom of action are supposed to confer.

Infidelity and the overstressed triangle are absent. Art is the only jealous mistress here. It has been the achievement of the author to write a real love story of the present workaday world, a story in which maid and man, husband and wife, through all their stress, even anger and possibly hatred, feel the dynamic current which steadily draws them one toward the other.

CHAPTER I

—1—

Call Me Up

Her life began to have meaning and importance the day that Ernestine met Will again on Michigan boulevard. She had not seen him since they were both children, and the attachment she had formed for him then was a pale plant beside that which sprang up in her now. She was so beguiled with Will, so in love with his long nervous person, his burning black eyes, and his bright exclamatory ways, that nothing mattered to her except that he love her. Lillian always contended that Ernestine could have stopped the whole affair in its beginnings, but it is more than likely that she was wrong.

At that time Ernestine was surfeited with safety. She felt in herself the beginnings of spiritual indigestions at the security and complacency of the Bricelands. At school she had discovered that there were worlds beyond worlds outside of her mother's. Her family's outspoken conviction that society began and ended in their own particular group was a conviction entirely unjustified by facts. The oasis, Sheridan Park, had become lost long since in the great activity of Chicago, and what the Bricelands considered "old family" was unknown among the really rich and powerful of the city, as well as among the newly rich and arrogant "gold coasters" of the North side.

Her schooling was finished when Ernestine was twenty. Lillian had been out of school a year and had already taken up the threads of the life outlined for them by mamma's connections. The sisters were congenial and fond of each other. At first Ernestine had been more than satisfied—she had been actively happy—just to be with her mother and Lillian again, with Grandmother Briceland and old friends in the big lovely house on Sheridan road. There was an endless parade of parties and dances and weddings.

But after a few months Ernestine decided that to be reared in an "old family" group on the North side of Chicago was almost as bad as being brought up in a little town. She knew everything that every one hoped or did. Some of the younger people were becoming definitely ambitious, and aligning themselves with the gold coasters, or making entry, through school connections, into the older and richer society of other cities. The Bricelands were inaccessible to the horde of apartment house dwellers who were moving into Buena and Sheridan Parks, and crowding the North Shore with glass-enclosed tenements. Mamma disregarded the invaders superbly and refused to join the northward movement out of Chicago or the southward movement downtown. She would stay where she was, and Lillian complained that her attitude not only protected her from climbers, but also prevented the family from doing any climbing of its own.

But Ernestine sympathized with her mother's loyalty to old associations. Ernestine herself was without social ambitions. She was established among intimate friends. She had only to be natural, casual, mocking, and it was enough. Ernestine knew a strange nostalgia. She wakened at night, filled with the need to use her gifts more actively.

And then, she met Will.

It had been twelve years since she had last seen him, but she knew him at once when she encountered him on Michigan boulevard one November afternoon after the Armistice. It was late afternoon, and the sky was thickening with dusk. Will stood with his shoulders against the great granite blocks of the library, looking out over the heads of other people, into the mysterious beauty of the clouds.

She stopped and looked at him, and her heart missed a beat lest this be some stranger who might respond too boldly to her stare. But she was sure it was Will. He did not see her at all, and his intense concentration confirmed her recognition of him. It was his old stare.

When she approached him and touched his arm, his glance came back from the clouds and rested on her face, and he smiled. His smile was charming. His whole countenance broke up into different lines and planes; his face seemed warmer, nearer.

Sat Leaning Forward, Looking at Each Other.

"Hello, Ernestine," he said in a natural tone. "Did you get the bird book?"

She laughed with delight.

"Will Todd, you are incomparable." They were shaking hands now and laughing together. "To think that you remember me, after all this time. Ten years—no twelve! But—of course I got the bird book. I wrote and thanked you for it! Didn't you get my letter?"

She was conscious of many things. Of his clothes, which were all wrong, too bright and loud, each garment chosen without regard to the whole. He was too white, like a person always indoors, and though he was tall, he was not at all robust. Yet he gave a distinct impression of energy, mental rather than physical. He seemed to Ernestine to be positively electrical, the most alive person she had ever known.

He put his hand within her arm and turned her southward, so that they walked shoulder to shoulder.

"Nary a letter," he answered. "I see now why I have spent all these years misunderstanding you. And you wrote me! My heart was broken, when I was ten. I've never trusted a woman since."

She laughed at his nonsense, but with a certain catch at her throat. When she was eight years old he made a beautiful book of colored bird pictures for her and bound it. He had brought it from far out on the Northwest side of Chicago, where he lived, to her home in Sheridan Park. She had been at dancing school that afternoon, and had never seen him since.

"It seems dreadful that you should never have been thanked for the book. I wanted to go to see you again, but no one would take me. But I spent a whole month's allowance on a gorgeous box of stationery with a huge gold E on every page, and I wasted most of it before I had a letter perfect enough to send you."

"I'll never have it now," he said. "It isn't right."

"I suppose I didn't address it correctly. Somebody should have helped me. But let me thank you now for the book, Will. It was beautiful. I have always treasured it. It was the only thing I had given to me that the giver made with his own hands."

"Don't thank me yet," he said, drawing her into an entrance and pushing a gilded button for the elevator. "Take tea with me, and thank me, in detail, and with repetitions."

As they ascended in the elevator he gave her arm a little squeeze, she looked up at his bright smile and smiled in return, memories flooding over her. He had always smiled charmingly. When he was a child she thought it was because he was lame that he smiled so sweetly, but now, he was free from any impediment that she could see.

Ernestine recalled the carpenter's wagon at the stone carriage block of her mother's house. It was a bright green wagon, with a green and yellow striped umbrella over the driver's seat. Old Peter Todd, who worked for papa, had got down from this high seat and turned to help his son. He—Peter—had come to repanel the dining room for mamma. As the boy's mother wasn't well, he explained, he'd had to bring him. Ernestine had at once extricated the tall thin boy, with a metal brace on one foot, from behind his father. He liked her. Silent with every one else, he was gay and friendly with Ernestine. He had come with his father every day that summer, and they had played together from morning till night. How kind mamma had been to him! Ernestine wondered if mamma would be as kind now?

She had never had so nice a playmate. Perched perilously on the high wagon seat, she had gone home with him and his father. The tiny house in which he lived had seemed to her like the little house on the plains in the story of The Wonderful Wizard of Oz. He had given Ernestine a pine shingle with a rippling American flag painted on it; and, after she came back from the lake in August, he had brought her the bird book, a duplicate of one of his own that she had admired.

And she had never seen him again—nor thanked him!

"What a charming place, Will!" she exclaimed, as they came out on an upper floor and into the room with the walls crowded with brass and metal relief work. Crowded, small, dark tables were set with colored linen runners. At every table there were women smoking, and throughout the room a sprinkling of men who looked strange to Ernestine. They had a foreign sophisticated air. They were not at all like papa or Loring.

They ordered pastry and coffee and sat leaning forward on their elbows looking at each other, smiling, remembering.

"But how about your brace?" she asked him. "Were you able to discard it at thirteen, as you expected?"

"Sooner. But walking without it was a staggering business for a year or so, I can tell. I'll never be a golf champion, and the American army had to go to France without me, but I'm well, really. I never think of it any more. It's such a darned interesting old world to kick around in, without wanting to play tennis. I work on the Sun, and often go home after two in the morning. I come over here sometimes, when it's quiet except for a few cars. The streets echo, and the strangest feeling of unreality comes over me."

"What do you do, Will, on the Sun?"

His eyes shone. His voice thrilled with enthusiasm and excitement.

"I work in the art department," he told her, and the way he put it, it was a "brag," a superlative announcement. "I've been there over a year now, and, Ernestine, I'm crazy about it. Lord, it's wonderful, the feeling you get on a paper. I've made some fine friends. John Poole is a friend of mine, and a good one, too."

Every one in Chicago knew John Poole, whose comic strip in the Sun was as much a feature of Chicago life as the beauty of the Blackstone reared against a winter sky.

"Why, Will, how fine! But what do you draw?"

He hitched his chair a little nearer to hers in his eagerness.

"Did you ever see, in a newspaper, the little curlicues around a half-tone—that's a photograph—decorations to make the picture, which may be odd in shape, fit into the type? I do those things, and lettering, and sometimes a spread." He sent a waitress for a paper, and showed her what he did.

"I get twenty-five dollars a week for it," he boasted. "And I'd do it for nothing, if they didn't pay me. The fellows are real guys, and we've got a regular boss. This is my day off, and here I am downtown, and going over there, pretty soon. I can't stay away. If you'll go with me, I'll drag you around the plant, and show you the big presses, and introduce you the Mr. Poole, and the fellows in the art room."

Speaking of Breaches

JANE AND THE DISH PAN BLUES

(© by D. J. Walsh.)

BIG plates that were grayish—little plates that were buttery—tumblers and dessert dishes rimmed with cream—silver tarnished from sulphur of the eggs and from the vinegar and salt of salad dressings—salad plates slimy with olive oil—cooking dishes caked with cream sauce—a roasting pan brown with drippings—truly, it was an array that might well have discouraged any young wife, the morning after a holiday, especially one who, like Jane Parsons, had been carefully spared any contact with dirty dishes, for at least twenty-five of her twenty-six years.

As a little girl Jane had never been permitted to "help mother" with the dish washing, for Jane's mother was ambitious for the little girl to be a musician and feared that any work in the line of household tasks would stiffen the pliant little joints of Jane's hands. And besides the music there was the matter of embroidery, for Jane did exquisite needlework, and of course dishwashing makes hands rough enough to fray delicate embroidery silks.

Once out of school, Jane had proceeded to capitalize her love for fine fabrics by obtaining a position selling draperies in an interior decorating shop. Her music efforts, it seemed, were not sufficiently noteworthy to warrant attempting that sort of professional career, so Jane contented herself with playing popular "hits" to entertain the numerous young men who paid court to her outside of business hours.

Naturally, since her hands must be kept in perfect condition to display effectively the beautiful brocades, the shimmering taffetas, the rich, lustrous velvets, and the cheerful chintz, cretonne and linen lengths in the shop, Jane never washed dishes at home.

In true modern fashion, Jane continued to keep her "job" for some time after she married Brett, so dishwashing was still taboo for Jane. Whatever dishes were used in the course of Jane's trifling culinary efforts were washed the following morning by the housekeeper who came in to straighten up the tiny apartment each day, while Jane and Brett were at their work.

The ultimate arrival of Betty Jane gave Jane-the-First still another alibi for steering clear of the kitchen sink. Jane must not waste her strength leaning over a dishpan, washing dishes. There was always some one to be hired to bring order from the chaos of the kitchen.

Brett, Junior, complicated affairs somewhat, for with his coming Jane and Brett, Senior, decided that a cottage in the country must be obtained "for the sake of the children." Usually, however, even in the country, a high school girl was to be found to come in "after school" and all of Saturday. Jane's hands remained surprisingly slim and white and soft.

But then came the reorganization of the company for which Brett worked. Instead of a definite weekly pay check there was an inconveniently, indefinite-sized monthly commission check. Even quarters figured importantly in the budget. And a high school girl charged a quarter an hour for dishwashing.

At first Jane tried leaving everything until after dinner at night and then drafting Brett as official dishwasher. But Brett was so tired at night that she found she hadn't the heart to keep it up. It would have been different if he had been disagreeable about helping instead of acting unhappy; she wouldn't let him do both the washing and the drying, since he couldn't afford to hire some one to do the work for her.

Jane tried washing dishes as fast as she used them. She had read that some efficiency experts claimed that was the least painful method of dealing with dishes. She tried doing them after each meal. She followed the advice of another expert who recommended a single session each day with the mop and rinsing rack. She tried the scald-them-and-let-them-stand-to-dry-themselves method.

But dirty dishes were dirty dishes at any time of the day, Jane had decided. In desperation she had tried propping a magazine upon the faucets, reading as she dishwashed, hoping thus to make the drudgery less dreary. But the experiment was a failure. The resulting cracks and nicks in plates and tumblers nullified the romance in the reading matter.

Then came the period when there were no cream rims on the dessert dishes. A 15-cent tin of applesauce served for dessert for the four members of the family. Only the children's plates were buttery. Jane and Brett tactfully assured each other they were both a bit overweight and really needed to forego cream in their coffee and butter on their toast.

There had even been one Sunday when boiled rice and stewed tomatoes had formed the main part of the dinner, with lamb chops, creamed carrots and stewed prunes for the children. And a Sunday when no bread and butter plates were used, for reasons that were not cheerful to contemplate.

Then came that most terrible of times when only spoons, stained with medicine—or tumblers that had held fruit juice or water—had needed washing. With both babies lying so distressingly white and quiet, or tossing so flushed and feverish in their cribs, Jane and Brett hadn't the heart to eat very much. Avoiding meeting each other's eyes, Brett and Jane had eaten crackers out of the box, gulped milk out of the bottles, then, catching sight of the little Jack-and-Jill-rimmed plate which should have been on the highchair tray, but which had stayed on the shelf for what seemed to Jane years, Jane would hastily abandon the kitchen, leaving Brett to regard Betty Jane's little cup and plate set—the set Sister prized so much because there was a real saucer to go with its pink-bordered cup, and having regarded it, abruptly decided that the furnace needed special stoking, or the ashes shoveled, or most anything which would offer him an excuse to bolt for the seclusion of the cellar.

* * * * * * *

Now dishes were heaped till they touched the faucets! A roaster brown with bits of turkey skin, saucepans sticky with cream sauce, big plates greasy with giblet gravy, buttery little plates, which had jelly stains for good measure, salad plates marked with four-egg-yolk-and-french-olive-oil mayonnaise, tumblers creamily rimmed, dessert dishes, which besides flocks of whipped cream boasted crumbs of cake. A certain little Jack-and-Jill-rimmed plate and a pink-bordered set comfortingly testifying to recent use, coffee cups with dregs, which showed both cream and sugar.

Was there ever a lovelier sight?

With a sigh of satisfaction Jane reached for the soap shaker and plunged it into the steaming water in the dishpan. A moment later she found herself chanting jubilantly something that sounded strangely like a syncopated,

> "Old Man Sunshine,
> Little Boy Bluebird,
> Help keep my dishpan full!"

Coyote Farming Profitable

Coyote rearing for the fur may be developed into one of the big farming projects of central Idaho as a result of an experiment which will interest many. The Hasche brothers bought 13 coyote pups last spring and kept them in a barn on their farm at Mobsen, south of Moscow. The animals were well fed and cared for, with the result that the fur became long and thick and unmarred by any of the usual hazards undergone by wild coyotes in their natural habitat. When killed recently some of the animals surrendered pelts of unusually heavy and glossy appearance with a rich color. Some of the animals are being kept for a foundation and plans are being made to capture more coyote pups to continue the experiment this year.

By Way of Explanation

The grouch was dissatisfied with the letter which his stenographer presented for his signature. He signed it, but made her put it back in the machine and add; "P. S. Dictated to a poor stenographer." She folded the letter and put it in the envelope, but no sooner was her employer's back turned than she took it out and added: "P. S. No. 2. The reason I am so poor is because he pays me only six dollars a week."—Exchange.

Cough Drops Took Fire

Cough drops a policeman was carrying in his trousers pocket burst into flame while he was riding a bicycle near Exeter, England. This was his story and he stuck to it, and the doctor who treated his burns eventually verified it. The cough drops, it seems, contained potassium chlorate. Carried loose in the pocket, they had come into contact with the phosphorus match box, whereupon nature took its course.

Earth Was Once Gas

Some learned men have read history in the earth's crust and in the starry heavens which led them to believe that millions of years ago the earth we live on was once a whirling mass of gas that had been thrown off by some larger gaseous body traveling swiftly through space.

This formless mass of gas was burning as it spun around in space, and after ages and ages this incandescent mass gradually cooled enough to become a molten round body.

As the heat grew less the earth became smaller and smaller. It shrank and cracked in spots, making mountains, valleys and plains.

Which makes gas older than the everlasting hills.—Gas Logic.

WORTH MILLION AND FORGETS IT

Someone Fails to Claim Fortune in England.

London.—Could you forget that you had a million dollars?

Someone in England has, and the sum total of fortunes that he and others have "overlooked" amounts to $20,000,000.

This vast sum lies in the hands of the officials of the national exchequer, which every year benefits to the extent of approximately $1,000,000 by the failure of an army of stockholders to claim the interest on their government stock.

That this figure is underestimated is admitted by the officials of the exchequer. It is done so purposely to avoid a flood of spurious claims. The present practice of the Bank of England is to wait until one claimant appears for a hitherto unclaimed stock, and then advertise for all other claimants to the same stock.

One reason that people forget such valuable property is that many stockholders go abroad and are never heard from again. Then there are aged or ailing persons, who forget that they possess stock, and there are the hundreds of persons, who when they die, neglect to leave any mention of their possessions.

A claim recently brought out the fact that an English woman, who had died at Marseilles at the age of ninety-eight, was entitled to $280,000 in stocks, and $100,000 in accumulated dividends, yet she had been constantly borrowing from her relatives.

The finance act of 1921 gives to the national exchequer all dividends unclaimed after five years, although the stocks remain in the holders' names for another ten years.

Dr. Carter to Seek Tomb of Alexander the Great

London.—Howard Carter, archeologist and discoverer of the tomb of Tut-Ankh-Amen, plans to embark on his most sensational exploit—search for the tomb and body of Alexander the Great.

Upon completion of his work at the sepulchre of Tut-Ankh-Amen in Egypt he said in an interview with the Daily Mail, he will proceed with the infinitely more difficult attempt to find the resting place of the young man who came out of Macedon to conquer the entire known world of 22 centuries ago.

Alexander died at Babylon in 323 B. C., but one of his greatest generals, the satrap Ptolemy I, later ruler of Egypt, contrived to procure the body and is said to have given it burial in a golden coffin at Alexandria. The discovery of his tomb, Carter believes, would far overshadow in importance the finding of Tut-Ankh-Amen's last resting place.

"According to Plutarch," he said, "the exact position of Alexander's tomb in Alexandria was unknown. However, it may possibly be found in one of the royal cemeteries, but I anticipate a long, difficult and expensive search."

The preliminary work, he said, will consist of probing the ground by sinking tubes and shafts, then working toward the center of the supposed royal cemetery.

Regarding Tut-Ankh-Amen, Carter admits there is still much work to be done, although he hopes to remove four great shrines from the tomb in October, when the Egyptian excavation season begins.

Hardy Constitutions of Dogs Seen in Operations

London.—The cat is not the only member of the animal family which has nine lives. Through scientific aid and operations, the dog is now enjoying several lives. Many operations performed in the Royal Veterinary college have saved the lives of numerous canines which ordinarily would have expired. A recent operation was performed on a greyhound with a dislocated neck. Shortly afterward the dog resumed its racing. At the college dogs have been provided with false teeth and limbs and even rejuvenating operations have been performed on them.

Times Certainly Have Changed in Forty Years

Kansas City, Mo.—There has been a change of views in the last 40 years. The following item appeared 40 years ago in a Kansas City newspaper: "A peculiar incident happened at the public library today. A young woman reading a periodical at one of the tables had her left leg accidentally (?) exposed so that a pink stocking was visible up to her knee. She was quietly asked to leave."

Women Soldiers Unpopular With Reds

Moscow—Women soldiers are unpopular in the eyes of the Russian government. "Female rifle squads" from the Red army were sent to the villages in discontented districts to protect communal farms from being plundered by opposition peasantry engaged in private enterprise. But, states the Soviet cabinet in an official announcement, "the rifle-women have fraternized with the peasantry."

LAKE SUPERIOR MAY GET NATIONAL PARK

Apostle Islands Named in Bill Before Congress

Ashland, Wis.—A group of islands, nestled like precious stones in a setting of natural charm on the edge of one of the most beautiful natural harbors in the world, may become the site of a new national park.

The islands, termed the Apostle group after a band of 12 rollicking brigands who called themselves the apostles and who preyed upon lone coureurs de bois on Chequamegon bay of Lake Superior in the early Seventeenth century, are as wild, rugged and beautiful as in the earliest days of Wisconsin's civilization.

Already the mecca of hundreds of wealthy Americans who maintain summer homes upon Madeline island, the largest of the group, the Apostles are to be made a national park if the efforts of Wisconsin citizens are successful in congress.

Bill Pending in Congress.

A bill introduced by Congressman H. H. Peavey, Washburn, Wis., to establish a park, is pending before congress now.

At La Pointe, the population center of the sparsely settled islands, the first known dwelling in Wisconsin for white men was erected about 1658. Two Frenchmen, Pierre Radisson and Medard Chouart de Crosseilliers, built the log habitation and, according to the history of the region, "were delighted with the country and Radisson described its beauties with an eloquent pen."

"The country was so pleasant, so beautiful and fruitful that it grieved me to see that the world could not discover such enticing countries to live in," wrote the French explorer.

Converted Indians.

The French remained in the region, colonizing and establishing trading posts, converting the Indians to Christianity and extending the boundaries of the French empire in Wisconsin and Minnesota. The islands remained a center of this work, the trading post at La Pointe, occupying a strategic position in the French fur trade.

Later, when the British obtained the territory, Madeline and the other islands flourished as local centers of the vast Northwest fur trade.

La Pointe at one time was the county seat of Ashland county, losing its identity shortly after the founding of Ashland. It still remains a center of fishing, trapping and has a population of several hundred summer residents.

Several of the islands are uninhabited but possess rare natural beauty in the form of sandstone caves and rock formations, cut into queer and fantastic shape by the waters of Lake Superior.

Boston University Has Typewriter Orchestra

Boston.—Almost any day if you stand within earshot of Boston university's college of practical arts and letters, you may hear a strange staccato rhythm, a novel interpretation of a currently popular tune.

Investigation will show that the weird melody, as fascinating as the dot-dash-dot of a telegraph instrument, emanates from what is probably the country's only typewriter orchestra.

Miss Elizabeth Carvell, instructor, inaugurated the plan recently "to demonstrate the elasticity of the method of using rhythm in typing."

While a phonograph plays, for example, "Parade of the Wooden Soldiers," or some other tune that lends itself to touch system interpretation, the 14 "musicians" sit in orchestral formation and tap out an obbligato.

One group devotes its technique to clicking out the melody, another to hammering out the second part, while a third punches away at the bass. The ultimate effect is surprisingly rhythmic.

"It may not necessarily speed up the words per minute," Miss Carvell explains, "but it gives a uniformity to the work which otherwise is often lacking. The second aim in using music is to give a new interest to the typewriting work and key up the girls to a new stride in their progress."

Model of Ex-Kaiser Is Target in Gallery

Trondhjem, Norway. — Trondhjem will be boycotted by German tourists unless the shooting gallery here ceases to use models of the ex-kaiser and the German crown prince as targets.

This step is threatened by the German Traveling association in a written protest demanding the demolition of the figures, but the populace of Trondhjem is having a good laugh, for investigation proved that the targets in question were made in Germany and exported to Norway.

Wife in Poorhouse, Husband Asks Divorce

Great Falls, Mont.—One of the most unusual divorce cases ever filed in a Montana court comes to issue when Solomon T. Niles, eighty-one-year-old Civil war veteran, attempts to secure legal separation from Mrs. Johanna G. Niles, seventy-nine, on the ground of desertion. The wife, forced to live in the poor farm, denies her husband's allegations. In her answer, she asks that her husband be compelled either to take her back or to provide for her.

LIGHTS of NEW YORK

By GRANT DIXON

Getting Service

A young New Yorker recently went to a famous mid-western hospital for a highly specialized operation, and has returned bearing word that, "out among the big things," he has been set down as a mental case. But it comes out even, for he thinks the nurses were a set of mental cases. He found, he said, that his $8 a day nurses would give him no service. If he asked for something, they replied, "You don't want that now." So he devised the scheme of holding a water pitcher high in the air and saying, "If you don't give me what I want I'll drop the pitcher." After the nurses had cleaned up two broken pitchers, his requests were granted, but the hospital officially set him down as a maniac.

Pet Clinic

Every Saturday afternoon, at a building in lower Seventh avenue, may be found a line-up of pet lovers at a free clinic for animals. Here, at the headquarters for the Humane society, come those who can't afford to pay for veterinary services, and those who can—for the reputation of the society's veterinarians is great. The other afternoon I dropped in to see Harry Moran, the superintendent, and to get a line on the sort of services dispensed.

Animals, Moran told me, have just about the same illnesses that human beings do. While I was there a woman arrived in her limousine, carrying a Sealyham terrier that was suffering from a case of nerves. And someone brought a billygoat that was suffering from—believe it or not—indigestion. One of the regular visitors is a cat with ingrowing toenails, brought in for a—tell me if I'm wrong—manicure.

New Game

Ultra smart New Yorkers who have tired of Guggenheim, anagrams and other childish pastimes have devised a new means of amusement. It is the game of larceny. If you are invited to the Smiths for dinner, you snoop about the apartment looking for Smith's wallet or Mrs. Smith's pocketbook. You try to steal $5. You win the game, of course, if you get the $5 without being caught. Then, if you're an ultra smart New Yorker, you return the money a week later, accompanying it with a light jest.

Minor Upheaval

One of the minor upheavals caused by the waistline-and-long-skirt epidemic has been in the window display business. Store proprietors have found that their wax mannequins are completely out of touch with the mode, with their lack of feminine curves. So many a sculptor's work of art has been confined to the junk heap, and the sculptors are working night and day turning out mannequins with fuller figures.

True Story

I can't mention the name, without getting into trouble. But here is the story: A press agent for a well known producer was reading in bed the other night after a hard day's work giving out press passes, and he came upon a startling passage in his book. "Why!" he exclaimed, "That's my boss!" It read like one of those Broadway novels in which the characters have fictitious names but everyone knows who is meant. Not willing to trust his own imagination, the press agent took the book with him to the office next morning, and read the passage to close associates of the producer. "Who's this?" the press agent would say, and then would begin to read. "You don't need to go any further," the listener would reply shortly. "It's the boss. Somebody has been writing another Broadway novel."

The book the press agent read from was a scholarly biography of Cesare Borgia!

Chick Is Some Chicken; Crows When 2 Days Old

Blytheville, Ark.—A young chicken which began crowing at the age of two days is the prize possession of Mrs. Chuck Burns.

"Chickie," a handsome Plymouth Rock, recently startled the other barnyard fowl and his owner by crowing lustily in imitation of a grown rooster.

Since then he rises early each morning, flaps his wings and greets the morning sun with a ringing crow.

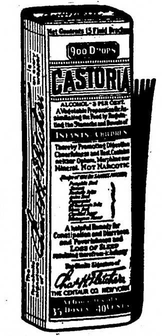
Each time he performs this unusual feat he has an audience of several unbelievers who go away convinced "Chickie" is "some chicken."

Man Turns Robber to Pay for Divorce

San Francisco—A "robbing Peter to pay Paul defense" failed Harry Schilder in Superior court here and he must serve one year to life in San Quentin penitentiary.

Schilder, a baker, told the court that he had held up a man in order to pay a divorce attorney fees.

"I had no other way to get the money," he said, "and court had ordered me to pay it."



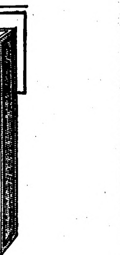
If Baby has COLIC

A cry in the night may be the first warning that Baby has colic. No cause for alarm if Castoria is handy! This pure vegetable preparation brings quick comfort, and can never do the slightest harm. Always keep a bottle in the house. It is the safe and sensible thing when children are ailing. Whether it's the stomach, or the little bowels; colic or constipation; or diarrhea. When tiny tongues are coated, or the breath is bad. Whenever there's need of gentle regulation. Children love the taste of Castoria, and its mildness makes it suitable for the tiniest infant, and for frequent use.

And a more liberal dose of Castoria is always better for growing children than some needlessly strong medicine meant only for adult use. Genuine Castoria always has Chas. H. Fletcher's signature on the wrapper. Prescribed by doctors!

This would be a more beautiful world if a man would laud his wife as he does his automobile.

When a man doesn't have the habit from the first of "putting his foot down," he never will.



Doctor's PRESCRIPTION when system is sluggish; costs nothing to try

When your bowels need help, the mildest thing that will do the work is always the sensible choice. Take a laxative that a family doctor has used for all sorts of cases of constipation. Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin is so pleasant to the taste, so gentle in its action, it is given children of tender age and yet it is just as thorough and effective as stronger preparations. Pure senna, and harmless laxative herbs; ingredients that soon start a gentle muscular action. Avoid a coated tongue, bad breath, bilious headaches, etc. Every drug store has Dr. Caldwell's famous prescription in big bottles. Or just write Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, Monticello, Ill., for a free trial bottle.

Back Ached, Nerves Bad, Thin, Weak

Milwaukee, Wis.—"Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription was so very beneficial to me as a tonic that I feel I can recommend it to any woman who is weak and run-down. Thru hard work I over-taxed my strength. My back ached, my nerves were all upset, I got very thin, weak and so miserable I had to give up, but by the use of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription my nerves were restored and I got well and strong."—Mrs. Geo. Happy Woman Tells How She Lost 19 Pounds of Fat in 27 Days

During October a woman in Montana wrote—"My first bottle of Kruschen Salts lasted almost 4 weeks and during that time I lost 19 pounds of fat—Kruschen is all you claim for it—I feel better than I have for years."

Here's the recipe that banishes fat and brings into blossom all the natural attractiveness that every woman possesses.

Every morning take one half teaspoonful of Kruschen Salts in a glass of hot water before breakfast.

Be sure and do this every morning for "It's the little daily dose that takes off the fat."—Don't miss a morning. The Kruschen habit means that every particle of poisonous waste matter and harmful acids and gases are expelled from the system.

At the same time the stomach, liver, kidneys and bowels are toned up and the pure, fresh blood containing Nature's six life-giving salts are carried to every organ, gland, nerve and fibre of the body and this is followed by "that Kruschen feeling" of energetic health and activity that is reflected in bright eyes, clear skin, cheerful vivacity and charming figure.

If you want to lose fat with speed get an 85c bottle of Kruschen Salts from any live druggist anywhere in America with the distinct understanding that you must be satisfied with results or money back.
